'Hideous' banking loophole plugged

Lost revenue: $500 million

OTTAWA (CP) — Government officials uncovered "a pretty hideous kind of situation" in the chartered banks last month after a two-year investigation of their security holdings.

The findings of the inquiry were released Thursday by William Kennett, inspector general of banks, in an appearance before the Commons finance committee. Kennett said the investigation helped convince Finance Minister Jean Chretien to close a controversial tax loophole in his recent federal budget.

Chretien provoked widespread criticism in the business community two weeks ago by announcing that two highly-popular financing arrangements between the banks and large corporations—income debentures and term-preferred shares—would no longer be tax deductible.

The government decided to halt the financing arrangements because income earned by the banks from them was classed as tax-free dividends rather than taxable interest. Federal and provincial treasuries had lost an estimated $500 million so far and authorities estimated another $150 million would have been lost to the federal government in 1979-80.

The government inquiry showed the two controversial financing arrangements accounted for 80 per cent of all chartered bank holdings of securities in Canadian corporations by October 1978. Two years earlier, they accounted for just 29 per cent.

In dollar terms, these holdings jumped to $7.2 billion from $765 million two years earlier—almost a tenfold increase.

Kennett released these figures at the request of Sinclair Stevens, Conservative finance critic. Stevens earlier asked the finance ministry officials for an idea how widespread the problem had become.

Kennett said his investigation showed that the banks and corporations considered these tax-deductible arrangements a low-cost substitute for normal business loans.

"As someone concerned with the capital markets of this country, I became more and more uneasy."

He said he was pleased and relieved when Chretien decided to change the income tax law in his budget to close off these arrangements.

The public probably had little idea of the extent to which banks used these arrangements because current disclosure rules allow them to go for months without making them known, Kennett said.

The government has come under fire from both opposition parties over the timing of the decision to close the tax loophole.

Airlines freebies: Some OK, others not

● No more free flights for me, says Lougheed. Page 45

Premier Bennett has decreed that no one in his office is to accept free trips on airlines but one of his cabinet ministers said she took a free flight to Hawaii two years ago.

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy said she represented the government on the inaugural flight by Pacific Western Airlines to Honolulu and did not see anything wrong with a politician taking that type of trip.

Opposition leader David Barrett said that when the New Democratic Party was in power Dave Stupich (NDP—Nanaimo) represented the B.C. government on a Japan Air Lines inaugural flight.

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said earlier the government does not have any rules against accepting free trips on airlines.

THE ISSUE WAS RAISED after Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed says he accepted free trips from CP Air, a private airline.

A spokesman in Bennett's office said Thursday the premier ruled "from day one, that nobody in his office, including himself, was to accept free transportation."

He said the premier decided the acceptance of free trips was wrong because they carried an obligation or what could be seen as an obligtation.

The spokesman said he could not speak for other ministries but presumed the premier's rules applied.

McCarthy said Thursday she put an end to her staff using free airline tickets on assuming the travel industry portfolio. She said that before she became minister, staff in the ministry were being offered and using free airline tickets and hotel space.

NEILSEN SAID MINISTERS have never been told it would be acceptable to take a free trip from an airline for holiday purposes, but "I don't think there is a written restriction on that."

He said he personally would find it inappropriate to accept a free trip from an airline for holiday purposes, but he does not feel accepting such trips leaves a politician open to pressure from airlines.

Barrett said the policy of the previous NDP government was that there would be no free trips. He said on official inaugural flights, when the government was to be represented, a government representative was sent.

He said Stupich, the former provincial finance minister, travelled on a Japan Air Line inaugural run as official government representative as requested.

"We go to openings or things like that. But no free trips. That was our policy. And I took none, and to my knowledge cabinet ministers did not take any."

All members of the Legislature are issued free passes on the government-owned B.C. Ferry Corporation, Vancouver Island Coach Lines and Pacific Stage Lines, as well as CP Rail, Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, B.C. Coast service and Canadian National Railways.

The CP Rail and CNR passes are valid on all lines for cabinet ministers but the others are limited to free transportation within the province, a spokesman said.

Somoza may go —after 2 votes

MANAGUA (AP) — President Anastasio Somoza said Thursday that he is willing to put his job on the line in a countrywide plebiscite to determine if the Nicaraguan people want him to remain in office.

But Somoza said in a nationally televised news conference he would not resign immediately if the plebiscite showed the people opposed him.

Somoza said if the plebiscite went against him another election would be held—not for the presidency but for seats in the National Assembly. He said the National Assembly then would choose his successor and he would not leave office until after a successor was chosen.

Somoza was asked why he had changed his mind after insisting during a year of guerrilla war and political turmoil that he will stay in office until his current elected term expires in 1981. Somoza said: "In politics, only the rivers never run backward."

Yarrows served strike notice

BY DON COLLINS
Colonist reporter

The twin shipyards of Yarrows in Esquimalt and Burrard in North Vancouver were hit with 72-hour strike notice Thursday by union officials representing approximately 800 tradesmen.

Jim McAvoy, president of the Joint Shipyard Conference, said mediator Ken Albertini would be asked today to report out of the case to pave the way for a possible walkout.

"If management wants to get serious and get down to negotiations we'll meet with them. But if not they'd better face the fact there are going to be a lot of people on the street," McAvoy said.

The Joint Shipyard Conference is the umbrella structure for 22 unions that bargain with the Burrard-Yarrows shipbuilding interests. About 200 of the 800 tradesmen are in Greater Victoria.

The unionists voted almost a month ago in favor of strike action if necessary, but at that time mediation hadn't begun.

McAvoy said mediation was adjourned after meetings Monday and Tuesday of this week. He said strike notice was served at noon Thursday in compliance with a decision by the conference membership.

Albertini would have to officially give up his attempts to mediate a settlement before a strike could begin legally. While the strike notice gives the tradesmen the right to walk out in 72 hours if Albertini is out of the case, they have a maximum of 90 days in which to act.

According to McAvoy, the major snag concerns six or seven items related to fringe benefits. The unions want a shorter work week, although they say they aren't specifying a definite number of hours at this point. They are also attempting to improve vacation and severance pay agreements.

The shipyards have been facing a fairly high rate of unemployment. An announcement earlier this week disclosed that Yarrows had been awarded a $100,000 dry-docking contract for the Alaska ferry Columbia, something that was expected to provide about 100 men with seven to 10 days' work. There are reportedly 160 men employed at the yards now.

. . . 'not desirable'

Lougheed sees crisis over delay in oil-hike

CALGARY (CP) — Federal proposals to delay a Jan. 1 oil-price increase of three cents a gallon might result in a serious crisis in Confederation, Premier Peter Lougheed said Thursday.

Earlier in the day, federal Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said Ottawa felt it was not desirable to have the Jan. 1 increase, adding that any subsequent oil-price increases would not be automatic if they would be detrimental to Canada.

At a news conference, Lougheed said if that was Gillespie's position, then Alberta would revert to its original stance that both governments signed a binding agreement calling for the Jan. 1 increase.

"The nine other energy ministers and the premiers said if there was a binding agreement, it should be lived up to," he said.

"You should then ask him (Gillespie) 'Are you going to unilaterally break an agreement with the government of Alberta that the other governments said should not be breached?'

"What kind of federal state are we going to have, that somebody is going to breach an agreement?"

"Now if what he is saying, as part of a negotiation ploy, that we're going to go with the alternative that (Alberta Energy Minister Don) Getty and Mr. Gillespie discussed,

TIME RUNS OUT FOR TIMES

LONDON (AP) — Officials of the London Times, an institution of British life and journalism, announced Thursday the paper is suspending publication in a showdown with labor unions.

The suspension was announced at a news conference by the paper's managing director, Marmaduke James Hussey.

He said there will be no edition today of the 193-year old newspaper and that the suspension would continue indefinitely.

Other papers of Fleet Street warmly praised The Times in fighting the test battle over new technology and union discipline.

But the National Graphical Association (NGA), one of nine major unions at the paper, remained adamant that it would not dicker under threat of shutdown.

The Times' management was not backing down on opposing wildcat strikes that Lord Thomson of Fleet, Toronto-based president of Times Newspapers, says are necessary to keep the paper and its sister publications

● Dropoff points, donations list, Page 2.

Nothing to laugh at, really.

When you're old and lonely and you're feeding them anyway, why not give them a word or two of affection? Or tell them what you think is wrong with the world?

For one thing, they don't talk back or make any cruel wisecracks like some of the people he meets.

That's the way the old man likes to look at it—at least on those days when the aches and pains of age subside enough to let him wander through the streets.

Feeding his feathered friends is about the biggest thing life has to offer him these days. To look at him, you'd think it was enough. The smile is usually in place. And those eyes of his seem to be forever laughing at the world.

He'd probably laugh at the thought of having to eat a sandwich and soup for Christmas—the kind of meal he could afford on his own limited funds. But inside he'd be hurting a little. There's something about being forgotten at Christmas that does that to people.

Fortunately, there are people like the Colonist readers to add at least a glimmer of joy to Christmas for the less fortunate members of our society—the old, the forgotten, the deserted, and those who are handicapped in one way or another. They do it through the Colonist 500 Fund.

As a result, an old man who cares about the welfare of pigeons will have someone caring about him this Christmas.

Terror strikes Ulster towns

BELFAST (AP) — Nineteen bombs exploded in 11 towns and villages in Northern Ireland on Thursday night in what authorities called part of a terror campaign against commercial targets by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

The only injuries reported by police were two policemen slightly hurt by an incendiary device in Ballygawley, 64 kilometres southwest of Belfast, and two young children slightly hurt in Armagh, the worst hit town, 56 kilometres southwest of here.

In Lurgan, 32 kilometres southwest of Belfast, dozens of members of the Jehovah Witnesses religious sect escaped injury when a bomb exploded next door to where they were holding a prayer meeting.

Tests predicted quake—scientist

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — A University of Texas scientist said Thursday a team he worked on predicted Wednesday's devastating earthquake in Mexico more than a year ago but that red tape prevented them from sending experts and equipment to the scene to lessen its impact.

"We had a program approved by the USGS (United States Geological Survey) but they were not able to come up with funding," lamented Dr. Gary V. Latham, associate director of the Geophysics Laboratory at UT's Marine Science Institute in Galveston.

"It's just a terrible shame," he said in a telephone interview from his Galveston office.

"We were able to forecast the location of the centre of quake to within about 25 miles," Latham said.

Doing the hustle —Vancouver style

By DON COLLINS
Colonist reporter

One recent evening in Vancouver I stepped out of a downtown hotel and was mistaken for a judge three times before reaching the corner.

Mistake No. 1 was made by a small blonde with a winning smile.

The only missing element in this comedy scene was someone standing on the corner shouting: "Here come de judge . . . here come de judge."

It was, you see, the very same corner involved in Vancouver's judge-meets-prostitute case. That is, Case No. 1. It is necessary to be specific at such times, since the city ended up with two cases involving the names of judges and young women.

To be fair, it's no longer a question of how a judge happens to contact a Lady of the Night in downtown Vancouver, but how he can manage to avoid it.

They're everywhere . . . standing in groups of four and five . . . hovering in doorways . . . lining the outside of buildings . . . coming at you individually, or two and three abreast . . . even occasionally peeking around telephone poles at you.

There is, of course, good reason for this bumper crop on the otherwise barren stretches of West Georgia Street. A court decision some time ago made it possible for enterprising young businesswomen to work the streets free of arrest—as long as they weren't overbearing in making their pitch.

It was all the encouragement that was needed for an amazing rebirth of free enterprise, sidewalk style.

As one who has made an exhaustive study of the trade in the past (purely for journalistic reasons, of course) I decided during my five days in Vancouver last month to do further research.

Court ruling opened streets to pros

Since I was in the city to cover a labor convention, it seemed all the more fitting. I mean, where could a man hope to learn more about the art of negotiations?

I had encountered the professional women in the east, but never had I seen them lining the streets like this.

As a reporter in Ontario, I had counted some of them among my contacts. They were kind to children and dogs and lied a lot, even to themselves, about the dreams they knew would never come true.

One professional I knew bought a monkey at a pet shop. She spent her off-hours talking to it. She said it made more sense than people.

As I pursued my study (scientifically, of course), I discovered it was possible in the course of a two-block walk to be told seven times that I needed company.

On one occasion two pretty young things seemed to want to fight over me. Just as I was starting to gloat over my obvious charm, I discovered to my dismay that I was only witnessing a territorial battle. One was an intruder. She eventually got elbowed off the block by two others.

Some men can travel this street like a dart going through tissue paper. They either ignore the queries of the women, or snarl obscenities at them, and continue on their way without delay.

My trouble is that even when I'm not doing research I answer all the questions politely, thanking the women for inquiring about my loneliness. This gives the appearance of interest in their product and at such times traversing a single block is a little like running back a kick against Edmonton Eskimos. (With the possible exception that one might secretly hope to get tackled in this game.)

During such a runback you tell one of their number about the little woman at the labor convention who suggested that some union organize the streetwalkers.

She manages a slight smile, then moves on. She has heard it all before.

After a while they get to recognize you as a non-customer and they stop asking the usual question. It's a bit of a crusher for the male ego, even though you knew all your charm was in your wallet.

You come out of your hotel one night and loiter a few seconds near two of the regulars. They give you a fleeting glance, then turn to more important things.

"Tania's back," a third woman says, approaching the others.

So they amble down the block discussing whatever there is to discuss about Tania, and you stand there a forgotten man.

Israeli commandos strike in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Israeli commandos struck 1.5 miles inside Lebanon Thursday and fired on cars along a Palestinian-controlled road, killing one person and wounding three others, local reporters on the scene said.

The reports said that some 50 Israeli commandos invading at dawn set up a roadblock inside Lebanon in an area controlled by Palestinian guerrillas.

UN peacekeepers arrived at the scene to take charge but the Israelis prevented it from approaching the cars or attending to the wounded, reporters said.

that we're going to adjust those terms by negotiation, fine."

He said Alberta was open to negotiation, but not any unilateral move.

"I mean I don't know what happens to this country if you have something as crucial as this and you have all the provinces saying: 'Look, don't break agreements.' "

In Ottawa, Gillespie said the federal government will stick with its proposal to delay a Jan. 1 oil price increase of three cents a gallon.

But final approval of what the minister calls "the principles of an agreement" will await a new round of talks with Alberta, the major oil producing province. That may take "a couple of days."

Gillespie emerged from a three-hour cabinet meeting that mulled over the oil issue to say the government felt "it would not be desirable to have an oil price increase Jan. 1."

Lougheed said during the recent federal-provincial conference on the economy, Prime Minister Trudeau repeatedly said Ottawa was going to live up to its agreement with Alberta.

"Now if they're saying today that they're not going to honor it, that they're going to unilaterally break it, then I don't know who you can have a more serious crisis in this Confederation of ours at this time."

He said Alberta would honor the agreement, but it was trying to help the Canadian economy by presenting the alternative proposal of a delayed increase.

No-shakeup decision angers street Chinese

TOKYO (AP) — Two thousand youths rallying in Peking have criticized the Communist party's decision not to shake up China's top leadership, including demotion of party leaer Hua Kuo-feng, Japanese correspondents reported Thursday.

The protesters gathered Wednesday night after Vice-Premier Teng Hsiao-ping disclosed to visiting Japanese politicians that the party central committee, meeting in Peking, would not order leadership changes despite a flurry of wall posters demanding it.

Former Peking mayor Wu Teh and two other members of the governing politburo have been major targets of the posters, but they have also criticized actions of the late party Chairman Mao Tse-tung and questioned the legitimacy of Hua's rule.

A report by the Kyodo news service said demonstrators expressed disappointment that the central committee failed to reverse the politburo's 1976 promotion of Hua to premier. Hua, a protege of Mao, subsequently became party chairman as well.

Some of Teng's supporters have demanded that he replace the 57-year-old Hua as premier, but the 74-year-old Teng has said the job should be held by a younger man and that China's most urgent need now is for stability and unity.

Most observers say Teng wants to maintain the political status quo as China begins its ambitious program to become a modern industrial power by the year 2000.

The campaign of posters and demonstrations, carried out with official sanction, has also called for greater personal liberties and a revision of the political system along more democratic lines.

Reports from Peking on Thursday indicated that the central committee is making important decisions regarding the modernization program.

Kyodo said the Chinese were sounding out Japanese companies about joint ventures on a 51-per-cent-Chinese, 49-per-cent-foreign basis. Similar appproaches were being made to French and West German companies, Kyodo said.

Since the Communists took over in 1949, China has refused to allow foreign companies to acquire interest in Chinese industries and has refused to borrow capital abroad.

The official Yugoslav news agency Tanjug, quoted unnamed Chinese sources, said any changes in the Chinese leadership must await widespread political and economic reform.

LONDON OUT OF TIMES

from being "slowly bled to death."

The Times had signalled the likelihood of a suspension by printing the answer to Thursday's crossword the same day.

The labor editor estimated in a front-page story that the suspension would last "two to three months." And true to form, small temporary slowdown actions by a few mechanical employees lost 68,000 copies of the "last" Times in the morning.

The management claims a plague of such small-scale slowdowns, many of them unauthorized by parent unions, have cost The Times, The Sunday Times and its three supplements more than 13 million copies this year.

NGA General Secretary Joe Wade, in a message to members, admitted The Times had suffered an "appallingly high number of unofficial disputes." But he still declared management is "hell-bent on bulldozing the unions and their members into abject surrender."

Hussey said all 4,250 staff members of The Times, The Sunday Times and three supplements will be paid for two more weeks in a goodwill gesture while negotiations continue. He said tentative agreements had been reached with 17 of the 65 bargaining units that operate The Times, representing about 800 persons.

Asked why the paper would not continue printing since it planned to pay the holdouts as well as staff with whom it has reached agreemet, Hussey said: "We are no longer prepared to go on publishing until we can guarantee full and punctual production."

Staff members who go along with the management are to continue being paid after the two-week period even if there are no papers.

If The Times comes back, as the management promises it will, the journalists' work will not be wasted. After past suspensions the paper always has printed extensive resumes of missed issues—complete with weather reports.

In the House of Commons, shocked and saddened members were holding an emergency three-hour debate.

The MP who successfully demanded the debate, Conservative Patrick Cosgrave, said it is tragedy of the highest order that something "Hitler and those who went before had failed to halt was halted by a total unwillingness to discuss."

Baby-exit battle is over

BOSTON (AP)—Jessica Katz—a one-year-old baby with a rare digestive disease—arrived in the United States Thursday, ending a long battle by her Jewish activist parents to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

A crowd of reporters, Jewish activists and relatives greeted the family's arrival at Logan International Airport.

"Our dear, dear friends, I am so happy to see you all," Jessica's father, Boris, said in halting English as photographers and reporters swarmed around the family.

"I love you all. Please don't forget our friends in Russia."

Jessica will be treated by a Cambridge doctor for malabsorption syndrome, a rare infant disease which prevents normal digestion. Soviet doctors told the Katzes they could not treat the child, and it was her illness which finally prompted Soviet authorities to allow the family to emigrate.

Dr. Richard Feinbloom, who diagnosed Jessica's condition by telephone several months ago, said he would probably see her within the next few days.

Banks

The budget measure, which forces banks to pay income tax on term-preferred shares and income debentures, came into effect four days after Petro-Canada, the government-owned energy corporation, took advantage of a preferred-share arrangement in its $1.4 billion purchase of Pacific Petroleums Ltd.

The new budget provision was not retroactive, so Petro-Canada was allowed to leave its plans in place.

Chretien's response to his critics has been that hundreds, if not thousands of companies besides Petro-Canada were using the tax loophole at the time of his budget.

Kennett's figures, released for the first time this week, appear to back up the minister, showing that chartered banks now hold $3.2 billion worth of income debentures and $4.1 billion worth of term-preferred shares.

Man of compassion buried

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—With family and friends grieving the loss, a city weary of death by violence Thursday buried Mayor George Moscone, shot and killed along with another elected official in city hall.

At an emotional funeral mass, one of his daughters trying to lead the mourners in prayer was overcome and had to be helped from the altar.

The body of Moscone was entombed in a private ceremony at a mausoleum at Holy Cross Cemetery in suburban Colma.

The popular Moscone was eulogized as a man who had a "passion for compassion" at the Roman Catholic service in St. Mary's Cathredral, where his four children led the congregation in prayer.

Rebecca Moscone, 18, broke down in sobs and had to be led away during her turn before the 10,000 mourners, some overflowing out the doors where loudspeakers broadcast the proceedings.

Moscone, 49, and Supervisor Harvey Milk, 48, one of the few avowed homosexuals in the nation to win a major public office, were slain in separate offices Monday, allegedly by former supervisor Dan White. The 32-year-old former policeman, charged with murder, has confessed the crime, according to the San Francisco Chronicle.

The deaths of Moscone and Milk hit a city already stunned by the suicide-murders nine days earlier of more than 900 people, many of them San Franciscans, at the Peoples Temple religious cult settlement in the jungles of Guyana.

Msgr. Peter Armstrong, rector of St. Vincent de Paul Boy's School in nearby San Rafael and a longtime family friend, while eulogizing Moscone said San Francisco has "survived many crises—the (1906) earthquake, wars, the depression, campus riots. And, strengthened by faith, courage and unity, we will survive this latest tragedy—the loss of the father of our city."

"For all of us who knew him, we can honestly say that he had a passion for compassion," said Armstrong.

The archbishop said Moscone told him 40 years ago he wanted to be his native San Francisco's mayor and even as Democratic majority leader in the state Senate with support to seek higher office, all he wanted to be was mayor.

"I love this city with my whole heart," Armstrong quoted Moscone as saying. "... After seeking the happiness and security of my family, my greatest goal would be to be mayor of my beloved city."

Moscone's body, after lying in state Tuesday at City Hall along with Milk's, was borne to the centre of the large, futuristic cathedral accompanied by a six-man military and police honor guard. The casket lay draped in white and gold.

Oxford eggs greet Nixon

Nixon apparently escaped egg barrage, and got cordial reception when he spoke to Oxford Union Debating Society, disclosing that he authorized wiretaps and break-ins to root out a group of Palestinian terrorists in the U.S.

Pick-up men told to write

LANSING, Mich. (AP)—Sixteen men who pleaded guilty to soliciting a Lansing undercover policewoman for sex must write essays about the consequences of their offences on their homes and work.

Ordering the punishment Wednesday, District Judge Charles Filice said he wanted the men to "pay a lot more than (they) ever thought possible."

In addition to the essays, which Filice intends to make public minus the men's names, he fined the men a total of $3,265, including court costs. Most were ordered to pay $200 to $250 in fines or spend 30 to 60 days in jail.

Filice said he thought the sentence "will be a deterrent for any other potential customers to just see the problems some of these men have had as a result of their lark."

Police Chief Richard Gleason said he was pleased at the sentences and did not think they were excessive or unusual.

Sanctions and pinches

WITH INTERNATIONAL TALK warming up — aided and abetted by the usual glut of related UN resolutions — on the subject of imposing trade sanctions against South Africa, it would perhaps be timely for some of the western nations to have a close look at the whole issue to see just where the pinch would be felt if such an action were taken.

History clearly indicates that the efficacy of sanctions as a punishment used by nice nations against naughty ones has been anything but successful. According to Professor Arnt Spandau of the University of Witwatersrand — an expert in international sanctions — this historical pattern of failure would remain unchanged if such an embargo were applied to South Africa.

In fact, he goes so far as to claim that any such move would hurt the economy of the Western world severely but still allow South Africa to survive for at least another 10 years. Maybe longer.

South Africa, he points out, is self sufficient in food, has a well developed industrial technology, possesses a wealth of raw materials, such as coal and iron ore, to say nothing of gold, chrome, diamonds and other strategic minerals, is able to fill 70 per cent of its energy needs by its own coal and is only months away from producing up to 40 per cent of its future energy needs through its highly advanced coal-into-oil processes.

Western Europe, however, is not quite as fortunate. If trade with South Africa were cut off, Dr. Spandau says, commodity prices would soar sky high and at least 250,000 Europeans would lose their jobs. He states that due to the South African connection more than 80,000 West Germans, 70,000 Britons and 100,000 other workers in France, Italy, Holland and other European Common Market countries find gainful employment.

The South African connection with North Ameriea — including Canada — is perhaps less strong but nevertheless significant. For example, Anglo American Corporation, which is one of South Africa's major conglomerates and worth about $8 billion, has considerable investment in Canada.

Anglo, De Beers (of diamond fame) and Charter Consolidated (all owned by Anglo) control Anglo American Corporation of Canada (Amcan) which, in turn, is the major shareholder in Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting (Hudbay). Hudbay, for its part, controls Canadian Merrell Ltd. which produced 241,000 barrels of oil in 1977 and showed a profit of $3.5 million for the same year. This is pretty small stuff by oil standards, but Hudbay and Amcan between them control Francana Oil and Gas which, for 1977, produced 143,000 barrels of oil and showed a profit of $9.9 million — a little bigger but still minor.

However, Francana controls Trend International which operates an oilfield in Indonesia in partnership with an Indonesian state-owned company. This field produced 28.5 million barrels of oil in 1977. Hudbay and Anglo-controlled (but Bermudan registered) Minorco also have large holdings in United States Copper while Minorco itself is the Anglo vehicle for much of its investment in America, Zambia, Brazil, and Rhodesia.

So there we have, in part at least, the South African connection in Canada. Just how many Canadians owe their jobs to South Africa or how many tax dollars South African companies pay into our Ottawa coffers is anybody's guess at this time.

Suffice to say, however, that it would be wise for our leaders to find out what the situation is for sure before they even start talking or thinking about applying sanctions against South Africa. As Ottawa discovered years ago in dealing with the Soviet Union, it is one thing to be staunch political idealists in the international field but it is quite another to follow policies which could bring hardship to one's own people.

Obviously Ottawa's best course at the moment is to continue its present policy which allows us to sit in moral judgment upon all other nations but presents no obstacle to doing business with them.

'The liberty of our people is the issue'

OTTAWA — Since national budgets are mixtures of broad policies and minute technical details, budget debates offer virtually unlimited scope for examination of the economy. And since the economy is the material base of political and cultural superstructures, a thorough scrutiny of budgets amounts, in fact, to examination of the whole fabric of society.

For these reasons I have always followed budget debates with particular interest and attention. I still do, even though over the years their pattern has become repetitively familiar, the partisan (or special interest) positions in them safely predictable, and their preoccupation with technicalities and trivia exasperating. But, with input by professional economists, trade unions, business and consumer organizations, there is always the chance that some day some of the MPs and Senators whose speeches fill the hours and days of formal budget debates in the two chambers of Parliament will look below the surface, put aside empty cliches and pompous hypocrisies, and come to grips with the real problems.

This time, it seemed to me, the chance of this happening was exceptional because the need for going to the roots of the mess we are in is more self-evident and pressing than ever before. But it's skating on the surface as usual. However, I came across an outline of what I think should be the essence of our concern in a book I happened to be scanning while following the drift of the standard superficialities and partisan irrelevancies of the "budget debate."

A quote will illustrate what I mean.

"Unfortunately, all the rhetoric about deficits and balanced budgets obscures the real danger that confronts us: the gradual dissintegration of our free society.

"This country is in desperate danger. The danger is obscured when we talk about (unimaginable) deficits or about whether we should balance the budget. The real issue is the government's share of the Gross National Product — of the earnings of every productive citizen in this land. What does it mean for our way of life? What does it mean for our free enterprise system? What is our free enterprise system? Isn't free enterprise related to human freedom, to political and social freedom? God Almighty, our forefathers understood that. The millions of immigrants who came understood it.

"When we see this monstrous growth of government, we must realize that it is not a matter of narrow economic issues. What is at stake is equity, social stability. What is at stake is the fundamental freedom in one of the last democracies in the world.

"When the government absorbs the GNP to the levels that we have seen in countries where the so-called 'humanitarians' try to create 'great (or new) societies' by taxing and promising and spending — to the levels that we are now seeing in this country — there is a tendency toward social instability. The very cohesion of civilized society is destroyed.

"And more than that. Freedom itself must disappear. We all know what the consequence of deficits are. We all know that neither man nor business nor government can spend more than is taken in for very long. If it continues, the result must be bankruptcy. In the case of the federal government, we can print money to pay for our folly for a time. But we will just continue to debase our currency, and then we'll have financial collapse. That is the road we are on today. That is the direction in which the 'humanitarians' are leading us. But there is nothing 'humanitarian' about the collapse of a great industrial civilization. There is nothing 'humanitarian' about the dictatorship that must inevitably take over as terrified people cry out for leadership. There is nothing 'humanitarian' about the loss of freedom. That is why we must be concerned about the enormous growth of government and its steady devouring of our citizens' productive energies. That is why we must be concerned about deficits and balancing the budget. The issue is not bookkeeping. It is not accounting. The issue is the liberty of our people."

The quotation comes from William E. Simon's recently published book, A Time for Truth (McGraw-Hill, 1978). Mr. Simon was the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury from 1974 to 1977, so he knows what he is talking about. Pity I can't quote anything of similar insight and import from Hansard.

China far from feeding self as drought withers crops

By V.G. KULKARNI
Christian Science Monitor

HONG KONG — China's prospects for this year's harvest are rated no better than poor, despite Chinese news agency reports that squads of millions of peasants, soldiers and urban draftees have "beaten back the drought."

A severe dry spell has forced China to boost its food-grain imports with urgent purchases from North America and Australia.

So far this year 16 of the nation's 29 provinces have reported a severe water shortage. The impact has been particularly harsh in the main rice and wheat-growing areas.

In a massive effort to beat the drought, extra buckets were made and factories, offices schools and Army units released personnel to carry water to the fields.

Even before the current drought, food-grain production had stagnated, largely between 1975 and 1977, averaging an estimated 270 million metric tons. As Peking does not usually publish consolidated economic statistics, foreign analysts have to base their estimates on scanty information.

The hardest-hit area is the rice-growing Anhwei province, with the longest dry spell in 120 years, while the drought in Kiangsu province has had "no parallel in the past 100 years." The Yantze, Yellow, Huai and Hai Ho river basins are so dry that in many areas reservoirs are knee-deep.

Estimating Chinese farm outputs is at best a hazardous game. For instance, the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated in July that China's cotton production for the 1978-79 crop year, which began Aug. 1, at 10.6 million bales. But by the end of October it was lowered by 10 percent, 9.6 million bales.

The consensus among foreign analysts, including U.S. agriculture department experts, is that China's food-grain output — including rice, wheat, soybean, coarse grains, potatoes and yams — was between 270 million and 275 million tons in 1977. (However, one left-wing daily in Hong Kong that closely reflects Peking's views put that figure at a low of 250 million tons.) With the ongoing drought, this year's output still is put at only 275 million to 280 million tons.

Despite increased water conservancy projects, better seeds and more chemical fertilizer production, which shot up by one-third this year to an estimated 45 million tons, Chinese grain production has barely kept pace with the increase in population. This has in turn necessitated large-scale imports of wheat from the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina in recent years.

Last year China imported 7 million tons of wheat from its foreign suppliers. This year it already has contracted to buy 8.1 million tons of wheat and corn for delivery before December. Of this, 3.5 million tons of wheat and 1.4 million tons of corn will come from the U.S. Some observers expect this year's grain imports to reach a high of 10 million tons.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, who visited China earlier this month, came away with the impression that the "Chinese are in a shopping mood." His stated aim was to explore long-range export markets for U.S. grain in China, since the problem of smut in U.S. wheat which the Chinese had complained about had been sorted out.

As the new regime in Peking wants to improve the living standards of the people, sustained food imports for years to come are considered likely.

These matters will no doubt be discussed by several congressional delegations that are due to visit China between now and the beginning of the next Congress early next year.

China's aim is to achieve food self-sufficiency by 1985, when the planners expect to produce 400 million tons of food grains. The annual average growth rate is pegged at four to five per cent.

This plan is considered rather ambitious, if not impracticable, by foreign analysts, who point out the effects of droughts and floods in recent years. With the Chinese emphasis on increased consumption and export of processed and packaged foodstuffs, large-scale imports of food grain could continue even beyond 1985.

As those before him Pierre blames the press

OTTAWA — It happens to them all when they resentfully face the fact that they have fallen from public favor.

No prime minister can accept it gracefully.

And it's all so sudden.

They can go on for years with their ups and downs, a plus here and a minus there, their highs and lows, but never anything terminal.

Then overnight, it seems, it falls apart. And never are they at fault.

Never can they accept responsibility.

Always someone else must be blamed.

Perhaps it's only human that after reaching the pinnacle of success — what higher office and honor in the land is there than prime minister — failure is impossible to accept.

To salvage any shred of self-esteem from an ego shattered by threatened public rejection, the falling political idol must point the accusing finger of blame.

Invariably, as with all prime ministers from Mackenzie King until today with Pierre Trudeau, it's the press.

Governments slip and begin falling and the always useful and regularly used phrase in official circles is:

There goes the rotten press again.

Mackenzie King said it, but had the good sense to leave voluntarily, retiring before the Liberals pushed him out of power's door.

But he didn't want to go, and died within a year, a lonely and embittered man in the isolation of his very ordinary white frame house at Kingsmere in the Gatineau Hills.

Louis St. Laurent said it, but following the lead of his mentor Mackenzie King, jumped before he was pushed.

Lester Pearson said it, and it was a toss-up whether he left willingly with a full and happy heart or was hurried along by Pierre Trudeau.

For Trudeau, after winning the Liberal leadership, took over just two days before Pearson had planned — and was anticipating — celebration of his fifth anniversary in power.

And John Diefenbaker said it, with reason, too, for as he was slipping and sliding from power, the majority of the parliamentary Press Gallery openly contrived to grease the skids.

"To work men," shouted a Toronto news correspondent, rallying the largely anti-Dief Press Gallery, "we have a government to destroy."

The press and "they" were to blame, charged Dief,

"they" being all those "enemies" at work "out there."

And now comes Pierre Trudeau with the same cry against the press, and oddly enough, those same "enemies."

Only this time, incredibly, Trudeau identifies those "enemies" as, pointing an accusing finger, "the public."

Imagine, blaming the very people on whom he will be counting for votes next election.

This time, though, he's figured a way to beat the "rotten press."

He switched his supposedly regular weekly but now decidely unregular press conference from the National Press Building to the federal Conference Centre.

That way, one of his stooges can control the conference, blocking hostile and allowing "sweetheart" queries.

Not to complete control, he is inviting palace favorites in the press to cozy little tete-a-tetes where all is sweetness and light.

But the record stands, between his own quotes, the public is the "enemy" and the press the villain.

When the story of the courageous women of our times is being written, the Three-Piece Polyester Slack Suit Group will deserve an entire volume.

The TPPSS (may their tribe increase) began as a small, non-violent task force of women who got sick of hemlines going up and down like a yo-yo, so they switched to slacks. When their stomachs strained at the polyester, they added an overblouse and over that a jacket. It was to become the marching uniform of the women who had had it with fashion dictators.

When you think about it, no other group in our times has dared defy the trend-setters from Paris, London and New York. Their tactics are some of the best in the world. They don't demonstrate, protest, lobby, burn anything, intimidate or take their cause to government. They just ignore whatever fashion goes in or out.

Mother has remained firm but drip-dried through mini-skirts, maxi-coats, vests, gauze, wrap-arounds, layers, jump suite, tents, jumpers, bush jackets, Chinese quilted tops and caftans.

She has weathered wedgies, berets, scarfs, pleats, padded shoulders, cowl collars, satins, denims, pajamas and signature blouses.

That takes a special kind of guts.

The other day I said to Mother, "What do you think of the new styles?"

"Tell me what they are and I'll tell you what I think of 'em."

"They're bringing stockings with seams back."

"It's all right if your legs haven't grown together; then they look like they're sectioning off meat at the butcher's."

"Shoulder pads are going to be in and so are culottes."

"That's nice," she said, "come see what I'm making."

On her sewing table was another TPPSS. "Mother, why do you limit yourself to just one style?"

"I'd like to change 'em once in awhile, but if I put the zipper on the side and tucks in the front, next year some designer would say the zipper has to be in the back and tucks are out. If I tucked the blouse in, next year designers would put it out. The jacket with the big patch pockets would be redesigned to be shorter and with puffed sleeves, and the whole suit would be made out of foil or something. If I left the hem at the ankle, some smart-aleck would say it had to drag on the floor. We're hanging in there because we dress to be comfortable."

I wish I had the guts to join her . . . but I'm weak.

Toberua Island lies an hour's run down the Rewa River then 15 to 20 minutes out to sea by speedboat.

It sits, all three acres of it, barely out of the turquoise ocean crowded with coconut trees, shade trees, exotic plants and birds. And it has room, when it's 100 per cent occupied, for 30 guests.

Toberua Island (pronounced Tumberua) is one of Fiji's smallest inhabited islands and is as remote from politics as it is possible to get on this earth. Anyone in a hurry to get away from it all could be sitting on its coral sands 14 hours after stepping on board CP Air's Vancouver-Honolulu-Nadi (pronounced Nandi) flight any Thursday or Saturday morning.

And so it was that, fleeing politics for a while, I came to be doing just that, sitting on Toberua's coral sand and contemplating the sunrise when a colored gentleman eased himself alongside me to ask how I was enjoying Toberua pronounced Tumberua.

Questions like that are easy to answer when you know that all you have to do that day in the way of exertion is walk about 25 metres to climb in a boat to go fishing.

"MY NAME," HE SAID, "is Frederick Caine. I am 32 years of age and the youngest Member of Parliament in Fiji. I represent what we call the General Western Common and am a member of the governing Alliance Party."

Before I could even consider how to avoid further talk of politics the Honorable Frederick Caine was explaining, without the slightest embarrassment, how he came to be the color he was and carry the name he carried.

"My grandfather on my father's side was English, my grandmother German-Samoan. My grandfather on my mother's side was a Scottish buccaneer, my grandmother was from the Wallace Islands, a Wallesian. I'm what we call in Fiji a fruit salad," he said with a broad grin.

With that sort of introduction who could resist listening — or asking questions.

Fred Caine regards himself as a bit of a maverick backbencher in the Fijian House of Representatives in Suva. Whether his reputation is as "maverick" as he thinks it is I wasn't around long enough to find out, but three days after talking to him on Toberua Island I had occasion to visit the Speaker of the House.

Speaker Mosese Quionibaravi was engaging me in quite a normal conversation at a reception in Suva when I mentioned Fred Caine. Speaker Quionibaravi took a long sip of his scotch and soda, raised his eyebrows and asked "where on earth did you meet him?" He said no more about Fred, but there was enough expression in the question to indicate that maybe the "baby" of the House is troublesome.

THE PROBLEMS OF A MEMBER of parliament in Fiji are not too different from those facing MLA's in British Columbia or MP's in Ottawa, although the scale is vastly different, the time frame almost beyond our comprehension.

Fred Caine has a hang-up on education. He wants to see much more money spent to get Fijian children into school in the first place and to keep them there longer. He was, when I talked to him sitting in his Fijian bure (house) on Toberua, angry because the government had just announced its 1979 budget with close to $1 million trimmed from education spending.

This year Fiji spent around $22 million on education, next year she expects to spend a shade more than $21 million.

And Fred Caine intends to let the Hon. C. A. Stinson, minister of finance, know that he doesn't think much of his policies. "Our children are our future," says Caine. "All I want to see is enough money provided by the way of scholarships so that all of our children can go to school if they want to."

Don't they all go to school now, at least for a few years?

"No. Many of my people cannot afford to let their children go to school."

But education is free in Fiji, at least until the age of 14, isn't it?

"Ah, yes, free if the parents can afford to send their children from a village without a school to a village with a school. Free if the parents can afford to lose a pair of hands from the farm," answers Caine.

IN OTHER WORDS EDUCATION may be free in Fiji between the ages of six to 14, but it isn't compulsory. In time frame it's back where Canada was at the turn of the century when parents had to make the decision as to where Johnny could best spend his time — on the south forty or in the classroom.

Fred Caine wants to change that system in Fiji, but he doesn't quite know how. "I am not well educated myself," he says. "And I have a hard time convincing those who are well educated that maybe we should be helping the parents to help the children."

What he means by that is that he would like to see a system of grants, from the education budget if need be, going to parents to enable them to afford losing a child temporarily to the educational system.

It is difficult for a Canadian to grasp and even more difficult for an ex-Britisher to accept what his fellow countrymen left in Fiji after 100 years of British rule.

They left an excellent system of law, a solid parliamentary system, a well-trained police force, a great military band — and nothing, absolutely nothing in the way of an educational system.

WHAT STRUGGLING SYSTEM there is in this fantastically beautiful land below the equator was established by the church in various denominational forms. The Methodists, Roman Catholics and Anglicans in that order.

Slowly over the past eight years, since gaining independence from the United Kingdom, Fiji has been moving away from church control of the schools to state run institutions. But the move is slow, the church influence still strong especially in the more remote areas.

Fred Caine complains that any financial aid available is going "to the people in Suva, the people who know whom to talk to, the people who get to see the politicians. The people in the outlying areas, my people, are neglected because they don't know who to talk to."

Fred raises his eyebrows when you tell him the same thoughts are expressed by MLA's in B.C. He's convinced that only in Fiji do the capital city dwellers get a better break than their up-country cousins.

When I get back to the British legacy or lack of it, Caine is again surprised. He admits the British didn't leave much in the way of a school system but almost defensively he says that was because they thought the Fijians a dying race.

One of the great gifts the British and other Europeans gave to the South Pacific was influenza, a disease which decimated the population and left the colonial authorities convinced that the race would soon die out. Fred Caine's loyalty to Britain and the Queen remains unshaken by that historic attitude of colonial rule. Or at least he isn't prepared to worry about the past when there is such a dramatic future to prepare for.

I ASKED FRED WHAT SORT of reception he will receive when, as a government backbencher, he criticizes the 1979 budget and the cuts in education spending. I point out that I am asking because in British Columbia it is rare indeed for a government backbencher to devote more than a passing phrase in criticism of a cabinet minister.

"Well, I don't think they like it too much in Fiji," he answered. "But what does a cabinet minister prefer, criticism from a friend or from a political enemy?"

I can't answer the question other than to say that in B.C. political criticism from a "friend" is unacceptable while criticism from the "enemy" is acceptable. Fred can't understand that at all.

Fred Caine, MP, has harsh words for his government's immigration policies which restrict foreign experts to a two-year stay in Fiji, four years if an extension is felt essential.

Caine says that view is short-sighted. "We say we want to encourage foreign investment but we tell the investors that after two years we want to run their operation. That doesn't make sense. The investor should have the right to run his own business. He can train Fijians to help him, but it's his money and he should be in control until someone buys him out.

"Local people can fill some but not all of the positions created by foreign investment. We are a developing nation and we need all sorts of experts and expertise to help us. We have done well since we became independent in 1970 but we still have a long way to go. We are not yet ready to run everything ourselves."

IT IS TO BE ANOTHER week before I see first hand what Fred Caine is worried about some 8,600 kilometres away in Fiji. But that's another story for another day.

On this particular day, Nov. 16, if you like precise dates, I order two more "pork chops" (cold beer) from one of the 28 staff people looking after five guests. This is the slack period before the December crowds when the 28 staff members will be expected to look after the 30 guests at full-occupancy.

It is significantly Fijian that there are no lay-offs in the off-season. It's another reason why wages are low on the weekly basis and why the service is so outstanding by Canadian standards.

Fred Caine looks out to sea and points to the island of Bau.

"That's where Charlie Savage lived and became a leader of the native people," says Fred. "He lead the Bauans against the Rewans in one of our last great tribal battles. The Bauans won because Charlie Savage had a gun, the only one in these parts."

Charlie Savage was a Swede by nationality but changed his name to Savage to impress the natives.

Fred points to another island, Ovalau, home of the original capital of Fiji (the Cannibal Islands) Levuka. It was there that Charlie Savage, convinced after his Rewa River victory that all natives were in awe of him, decided to take over the sandalwood trade.

THERE WAS GOOD REASON for Charlie's arrogance. He has survived the shipwreck of the Eliza on one of Fiji's innumerable reefs, had used his unusual red hair to convince the local chief that he had special powers and his musket to prove it. As a result Charlie — the closest the Fijians could come to saying Kalle — changed his surname from Svenson to Savage and was, over a period of very few years, awarded 30 wives.

But he achieved his lasting niche in history at Wailea.

In the museum at Suva there is a dramatic painting showing the demise of Kalle Svensen just before he became one of the last two whitemen to be ceremonially consumed by Fijian natives. The other man linked with Charlie Savage was completely opposite in character and way of life.

A Methodist missionary, the Rev. Thomas Baker, was a victim of the Highland tribes in 1867. His bones lie buried beneath a small church on the banks of the Rewa River a short distance from Nakelo Landing where, not too long ago, I caught the river boat to Toberua Island to get away from politics.

We'll save that story for another winter's day.

Waste in name of environmentalism

Your report, Colonist, Nov. 22, Fish hadn't much of a chance, allows me to once again take another slap at the waste and nonsense going on in the name of environmentalism. Here we have the totally naive spectacle of our governments purporting to carry on a salmon enhancement program.

Look at where they are working. In a stream which enters an industrial harbor; a stream which flows through much development; a stream which carries off the waste water from streets, roads and developed areas; a stream which in fact goes dry depending upon the state of the season; a stream surrounded by human predators.

And our naive biologist expresses surprise that the fish didn't survive, — "dwindling almost to nothing" were the plaintive words used. It's like sending children out on to the highway to play; how many do you think would survive?

Are these people so devoid of the facts of life? Surely the place to carry on enhancement programs is in our multitude of west coast streams, which do not flow through a hinterland taken over by the day to day consequences of urban life.

Do we also have enhancement programs to return deer, bears and cougars to our back gardens so that our Indians can live as they once did?

Commitment to end torture

Late in 1975, just before the election, the B.C. Social Credit party stated: "Cruel methods of trapping will be banned within three years and indeed sooner if humane traps are invented before that time."

The end of the three-year period will occur on Dec. 31 — a month from now. But still there is no indication that cruel trapping is to be banned. Indeed, there is clear evidence that the provincial government intends to postpone any ban. Written material issued by the Honourable Sam Bawlf, minister of recreation and conservation, includes the statement: "B.C. will continue to review legislation to eliminate cruel trapping methods within technological limits."

This is an entirely different stand than that taken three years ago. The more recent statement is conditional. It implies that something might be done if something else happens first. It is not the straightforward, positive pre-election statement that "Cruel methods of trapping will be banned within three years and indeed sooner if humane traps are invented before that time."

Surely that was a commitment to put a stop to the cruelty within three years at the outside!

I have tried to understand the arguments against the ban. These include the argument that the animals are a part of our resources and must be harvested, the argument that some people (trappers) will suffer if their income from trapping were to be cut off, the argument that other people working for fur-companies, trap-manufacturing concerns, etc., would lose their jobs. But invariably my effort to understand ends with the shocking thought: "Notwithstanding all that, many, many animals continue to suffer severely." In the trapping season in B.C. each year, more than 100,000 animals are caught in traps. And that means a lot of flesh-tearing, bone-crunching pain!

Is our government going to act?

Eardrums offended

So far as I know, CBUT Vancouver has the unenviable distinction of being the only TV station which both before and after each segment of its 6 p.m. newscasts disgustingly offends our eardrums with a combination of raucous noises that suggest the desperately hopeful, yet woeful mating call of a sadly aging coyote, followed by a cacophony similar to the racket of a disused oil drum partly filled with rocks hurtling down a rocky hillside.

Much as I find offensive the usual TV commercials, at least they do have the saving grace to help defray the cost of TV operations whereas in the case of the aforesaid noises, some hair-brained CBC staff appointee is actually paid a salary at partial taxpayers' expense to inflict his eardrum offenses upon us.

On the subject of TV commercials, it thoroughly disgusts me that our Bank of B.C. should pay that multi-millionaire Lorne Greene to yap their sales-promotional material. Surely, among our many B.C. unemployed there are many, who besides being infinitely more deserving and being paid even less expensively, are just as equally competent to memorize and recite these blurbs. I suggest that if this latter course were adopted by all advertisers it would result in there being much more of an incentive to increase such advertisers' business.

Gravy flows on a freight train

The giant CP Rail has taken the people of Canada for a second ride and it will not be the last. Freight is the gravy train while passenger is otherwise. It made fortunes from land grants received to build a complete rail service. Now it ingeniously unloads its passenger section to VIA which is an amalgamation with the CNR and we do have to guess who will pick up the deficit — we the people via CNR.

After receiving land, timber and mineral rights on Vancouver Island it tried to "dry up" traffic on the E & N passenger service (not freight). Well meaning people tried to force continuance or alternatively, return the grants. Service continued reluctantly until some genius thought about lumping it with VIA and we have an about face i.e. publication of service, time-tables, fares etc. and we pay for it twice.

Canadians, tell the government to buy back Canada. The oil companies have become too powerful. Barrett tried to exercise some control and found out just how much clout they had. President Carter could not believe how much lobby power they had until . . . he took them on and admitted that the giants were controlling the U.S.A.

Canada is now trying to participate in the billions being made in oil here to satisfy Canadians. Now we have shortsighted Joe "Who" telling us that, if elected, he would sell Petro-Can back and the sad part of it all is that it could happen.

Economists have told us repeatedly that the giants will soon control government completely. That is not difficult to understand as, when we reach the $300 billion deficit mark all the giants need do is choke off our borrowing power and put our government with hat in hand.

The counterbalance must be labor. If we keep labor under responsible leadership it will be able to wield sufficient power to maintain some semblance of balance. Automation will take its toll on the work force but money must be distributed to consumers to enable purchase of goods produced. However, excessive export could relieve that pressure and leave the people of Canada vulnerable to the whims of the giants.

Canadians must be vigilant, productive and concerned for our next generation. The British have demonstrated much apathy and fortunately have now been saved at least temporarily by the North Sea oil which, if properly controlled and taxed can save the day.

Windows slammed

If any confirmation of "the Peter Principal" were needed, your editorial re the withdrawal of tax exemption on thermal windows says it all.

Our greatest problem, next to the population explosion, is the supply of a relatively cheap source of energy. Without this asset, any industrial country is in real trouble.

To my way of thinking, every encouragement should be given to our population to insulate their homes and places of business to the utmost.

You are right on when you provide the figures for the amount of heat radiation from single glazed windows. If it is of such minor importance, why is it that in our north, where keeping warm is a matter of survival, most of the windows are triple glazed.

Is it too much to hope for, that our lords and masters will one day begin to show some signs of a return to sanity?

MARKET REPORT

Closing quotations for Thursday, Nov. 30, 1978

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market shook off day-long doldrums in the last hour of trading Thursday as bargain hunters entered the market looking to capitalize on losses in the two previous sessions and the dollar scored late gains.

For most of the day, the market appeared to be duplicating its sluggish performance of the past two weeks. Volume was light and there was very little movement up or down, which analysts attributed to a lack of news.

There was a strong showing by the U.S. dollar, which rose against most currencies in world foreign exchange trading.

After the market closed, it got news that seemed to justify the late exuberance when the Federal Reserve said the nation's basic money supply fell $1.9 billion in the latest reporting week.

The decrease apparently indicates that the Federal Reserve Board's policy of raising interest rates to slow inflation is working. The stock market has reacted poorly to recent interest rate increases.

Texaco cuts refinery staff

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — Texaco Canada Inc. announced plans Thursday to cut the work force by 190 workers by June 1 next year as part of a drastic reduction in operations at its 50,000-barrels-a-day capacity refinery in nearby Port Credit.

While the Port Credit refinery will continue production of 1,000 barrels of petrochemicals a day, it will stop producing a wide range of petroleum products including gasoline, stove oil, home heating oil and aircraft fuel.

This production will shift to Texaco's newly-opened facility at Nanticoke on Lake Erie, where 300 workers currently are employed full-time.

Shell Oil rations gasoline in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Shell Oil Co. announced Thursday that it will begin rationing all its brands of gasoline to its U.S. dealers today and Texaco Inc. warned that its gasoline supplies are "extremely tight nationally."

Shell spokesman Norman Altstedter said the company's ration program might last through "the end of December or the early part of January."

Shell, the largest gasoline marketer in the United States, blamed the shortage on an unseasonal "dramatic increase in demand," on maintenance work at two refineries and on federal "regulations which have held down" Shell's prices.

Shell plans to limit dealers to either 75 per cent of the gasoline they pumped last December, or—if the amount is greater—to 75 per cent of their 1972 volume.

Mayo control back in Canada

Nanaimo mills face changes

By GEORGE GIBSON
Colonist Business Editor

NANAIMO — Mayo Lumber Co. of Nanaimo has passed back into Canadian control. An announcement this week here confirmed that Pacific Logging Co. Ltd. of Victoria, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Canadian Pacific Investments Ltd., has joined with the Mitsubishi Corporation of Japan to form a new company, Mayo Forest Products Ltd.

Mayo Lumber Co. control was assumed by Mitsubishi Canada in 1972 when it obtained 60 per cent of ownership from the Mayo family, owners and operators in Vancouver Island forestry since 1916.

Mitsubishi later obtained full ownership after a lengthy shutdown in 1975 and 1976.

Maurice Ayers, Victoria, vice-president of Pacific Logging, said in an interview Thursday that Pacific has controlling interest in the new company.

The new company has acquired the assets of Mayo Lumber, which includes a mill in Nanaimo and a timber quota in the Dean Channel area near Ocean Falls. In a related move, the newly-formed company has also acquired the fixed assets of a lumber mill operated by G.W. Dorman Pulp Chip Co. Ltd. on the Nanaimo assembly wharf.

G.W. Dorman will continue to operate its other mill on Stewart Ave.

The assembly wharf mill will be closed at the end of this year, Pacific Logging states, and $16 million will be spent on a reconstruction project. This should result in a fully-modern high-capacity mill that will have an 80-million fbm capacity per year.

Spokesman Ayers said that while most of the production will be designed for the Japanese market and will be in metric sizes, other markets can be served as well.

The Dorman mill presently employs about 100 workers and produces about 35 million fbm. These employees will be offered jobs in the reconstruction of the mill which, when operational, will employ about the same number as the previous mill on a two-shift basis.

Mayo Forest Products will continue to operate the present Mayo mill without changes. About 80 people are employed there.

The Nanaimo Harbour Commission has already reached an agreement with the new firm and from statements made by its chairman, Don Rawlins, appears gratified that the new arrangement is underway.

He said:

"The commission has in recent months been concerned with the ability of the (Dorman) mill to continue its contribution to both local employment and the commission's forecast tonnages. This concern has been compounded by the heavy financial burden placed upon these facilities by the Duke Point proposal.

"In short, the Duke Point proposal is completely dependent upon the inner harbor for financial viability."

Oilsands jobs in thousands

CALGARY (CP) — The need for skilled workers at a proposed oil sands plant near Cold Lake, Alta., will be so great that many are expected to be drawn from other provinces, says a management study.

The $4.7-billion plant, a project of Esso Resources Canada Ltd., will provide 10,000 jobs at the peak of construction in 1984.

Over the next 25 years, it is expected to keep 6,540 persons employed in Alberta, including persons engaged in supplying coal to the project's steam generating plant.

Skagway oil line proposed

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. and Canadian sponsors of the multi-billion-dollar natural gas pipeline to carry Alaskan gas to U.S. markets are planning a new $1-billion oil pipeline.

Northwest Energy Co., the U.S. sponsor, say it will file applications Dec. 8 with the U.S. interior department for the oil pipeline plan.

The Canadian partners, Alberta Gas Trunk Line Co. Ltd. and Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd., are expected to file similar applications with Canadian authorities.

Early plans call for the oil pipeline to start at Skagway, a port on Alaska's southeastern coast. Surplus oil could be moved to Skagway from Valdez, the terminal for the existing trans-Alaskan oil pipeline.

West coast markets in the United States currently are buying only about one-half the oil now flowing through the trans-Alaska pipeline, with the rest moving through a long shipping route through the Panama canal to eastern refining centres.

A new oil pipeline from Skagway could carry about 500,000 barrels a day of crude oil directly to the U.S. Midwest. Tankers shuttling back and forth from Valdez would bring the oil to the Skagway terminal.

The oil pipeline would follow a highway and rail route through Canada's Yukon territory, then follow the route of the proposed natural gas pipeline into Alberta, where it would link with existing crude oil pipelines into the U.S. Midwest.

So far, there are still doubts about the companies' ability to construct the natural gas pipeline with private financing, and its estimated costs have now risen to around $12 billion. Despite these doubts, the gas pipeline's sponsors are apprently ready to go ahead with their oil pipeline proposal.

The new proposal would likely complete for approval with the Northern Tier Pipeline Co. proposal of a line from Washington state to Minnesota, and possibly the proposal of Standard Oil of Ohio (SOHIO) to convert existing pipelines and build new ones linking California with Texas.

B.C. mineral values higher

By Canadian Press

Mineral production in British Columbia reached an estimated $1.9 billion during 1978, an increase of $157.7 million compared with 1977, provincial Mines Minister Jim Chabot said Thursday.

In a news release, the minister said coal accounted for $85.1 million of the increase, followed by metals, $73.3 million; structural materials, $13 million; and petroleum and natural gas at $6.4 million.

He said the value for industrial minerals dropped $20.1 million.

Metal production represented about 40 per cent of the total value, and copper maintained its position as the most important metal produced in terms of value, he said.

"In spite of the fact that the Granduc mine closed in mid-year and the Gibraltar mine suffered a lengthy strike, the total quantity of copper produced was 274.6 million kilograms, only fractionally less than the 1977 total."

Chabot said that with a small increase in the international price of copper and the impact of the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar, the value of copper reached $418.2 million, an increase of $33.4 million over the previous year.

"The production and values of gold and iron concentrates are up over 1977 while the quantities of lead, molybdenum and silver are down but their values are up. Both the quantity and value of zinc are down."

Crude oil and natural gas sales were down because of a slackening in the export market, he said, but prices were up.

"A significant increase in both quantity and value of coal is anticipated for 1978 with a record production of 9.4 million tonnes valued at $413.9 million."

He said the value of industrial minerals will decline to $59.1 million this year from $79.2 million in 1977.

"Although the production and value of sulphur are up, production of asbestos is down considerably due to a lenghty strike."

DOLLAR DOING BETTER

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian dollar climbed more than a fifth of a cent against its U.S. counterpart on the key Toronto money market Thursday in what several traders described as a "surprising" recovery.

The dollar closed at 85.45 U.S. cents, up from Wednesday's price of 85.24 U.S. cents and its highest level since Nov. 6.

"The dollar did very, very well today," a senior trader in Montreal said, noting it has jumped more than a third of a cent so far this week. "It shouldn't really be going up, but for some reason it is," he added.

At one point Thursday, the currency rose as high as 85.56 U.S. cents in moderate trading on the interbank wholesale market, where banks trade large amounts of currency with each other and exchange rates are set.

The trader said the only explanation for the dollar's positive showing was a large commercial order originating out of the mid-western United States, apparently for purchases of Canadian wheat.

A trader in Toronto agreed the dollar is performing better than most market analysts had expected.

And Highlite's also 50¢ lighter in price-just $4.35/dozen.

Landlords cooling rent hikes in B.C.

Canadian Press

Most landlords in B.C. have raised rents less than the maximum allowed since rent controls began to be phased out April 1, a spokesman for the consumer and corporate affairs ministry said Thursday.

"We are discovering that landlords are not asking the full seven per cent permitted, but an average of five per cent," deputy minister Tex Enemark said in an interview.

He said gouging was not anticipated because B.C. legislation provided a post-control mechanism in the form of fixed-choice arbitration.

"This means that if a tenant thinks the increase requested by the landlord is too much, he can dispute it. But he must propose what he thinks would be a reasonable increase, and the rentalsman picks one or the other."

Enemark said this prevented landlords from seeking unreasonable increases and tenants from aiming for too low an increase. He said there had been few complaints in the past six months.

The deputy minister said B.C. was the only province with post-control regulations.

Controls will be removed effective Jan. 1 on one-bedroom apartments renting for more than $300 a month, two-bedroom apartments with rents higher than $350 a month and three-bedroom apartments for over $400 a month.

First Viets arrive in Vancouver

The first of an anticipated 80 Vietnamese refugees expected to settle in B.C. have arrived in Vancouver.

Tran Pan Huu, his wife and two young children arrived Tuesday and are temporarily housed in a Vancouver hotel until permanent accommodation can be found for them. None has arrived in Victoria yet.

B.C.'s share of the refugees is expected to be assimilated at the rate of about 15 a month, with costs absorbed by the federal government.

Labor Minister Allan Williams said Wednesday that a plan put forward by a Victoria Roman Catholic priest to settle Vietnamese refugees in the town of Butedale on the north coast of B.C. is now before Bud Cullen, federal manpower and immigration minister.

Williams said, however, the proposal faces one major roadblock put up by the federal department "namely that the immigrants who come should, as quickly as possible, find their way into the mainstream of Canadian life.

"And to establish a separate community on the mid-coast of B.C. seems to run contrary to that basic policy," he said.

Rev. Guy Merveille is seeking help to buy the town, located on Princess Royal Island about 90 kilometres (55 miles) south of Kitimat, for about 50 refugee families.

Williams said the proposal does not involve the 600 Vietnamese refugees arriving in Canada from among the 2,500 left stranded aboard the freighter Hai Hong off the coast of Malaysia.

He said it involves some of the 2,500 refugees Canada has agreed to accept over a two-year period, starting last September.

The minister said Merveille's idea was to recruit farmers and fishermen from among the refugees to settle in the town.

Merveille said the Canadian Fishing Co. has offered to sell 30 acres at the townsite for $200,000.

Seat belts topic of survey

A spot survey will be held Saturday during the noon hour at the corner of Douglas and Hillside to ascertain how many Victoria drivers are wearing seat belts.

The survey is being done by Young Drivers of Canada, a federally-chartered, non-profit organization, and those being surveyed by the volunteers who will be situated on a traffic island will be getting "prizes."

Harris Bredavs, a spokesman for the group, said drivers wearing their seatbelts will receive a free coupon for a Big Mac from McDonald's restaurants and a Captain Cook bicentennial medallion from the Vancouver Island Information Bureau. Those who are not, Bredavs said, will receive brochures from the provincial government and the B.C. Automobile Association which include statistics on injuries received by those not wearing seat belts who become involved in accidents.

IF YOU'RE CONCERNED ABOUT THE FUTURE OF YOUR BUSINESS READ THIS.

One of the very real dangers your business — and thousands like it — may face in the near future is a shortage of skilled tradesmen, journeymen and craftsmen.

The reason? Not enough apprentices are being hired and trained to fill the gap left by those who will retire over the next few years. It's that simple.

Sure, you've always been able to hire a worker away from someone else. But that's always assuming that someone else is training them. And it's assuming there will always be enough men and women to go around. And it's assuming that they'll want to come to you. And it's assuming that you'll always be able to afford the going rate.

Apprentices work on a graduated wage scale until they're fully qualified, so it's an economical way to get and train the skilled help you'll need tomorrow. They get their on-the-job training from you, so they get to know the way you want things done. And they receive technical training from us. Free of charge.

One more thing. When you hire apprentices, you're getting people who want to work. Otherwise they wouldn't be in the program.

So do yourself a favour. Hire an apprentice. Call the nearest office of the British Columbia Ministry of Labour, or any Government Agent, about the 177 different trades of the Apprenticeship Training Program.

Nigeria not pleased with U.S. policies on Africa

White minority rule unchecked—leaders

By DAVID LAMB
Colonist · Los Angeles Times Service

LAGOS, Nigeria — Last April, after delivering a speech during his state visit to Nigeria, President Carter received an unusually blunt word of thanks from the director of black Africa's most prestigious political research institute.

"Mr. President," said Bolaji Akinyemi, director general of the Nigerian Institute of International Affairs, as Carter returned to his seat, "the biggest honor which we in this country confer on people who we respect is not to ignore them.

"IN THE COMING days, weeks and months, every word you have uttered here this evening is going to be analysed. It is going to be dissected. And, Mr. President, we will keep you informed..."

Now, seven months later, that analysing has been done, and it is clear that Nigeria, black Africa's most influential nation, is not pleased. In government and private circles, many Nigerians like Akinyemi are frustrated and embittered over the pace of events in southern Africa and have resurrected their old suspicions about Washington's interest in, and commitment to, Africa.

THEIR COMPLAINT focuses on the failure of the West in general and the United States in particular to negotiate an end to white minority rule in Rhodesia and Namibia (South-West Africa).

Nigeria had staked a considerable amount of its own prestige in backing Western peace plans for southern Africa. It played a major role in getting SWAPO, the Namibian guerrilla movement, to accept internationally supervised elections, and it has largely replaced Tanzania as Washington's intermediary in dealing with the Patriotic Front, the guerrilla movement fighting the Rhodesian government of Prime Minister Ian Smith and his three black co-leaders.

BUT RECENT events appear to have lessened the possibility of transferring power peacefully.

"There is a feeling in this country that we have been let down," Akinyemi, the political scientist, said in an interview. "The United States simply hasn't delivered on its promises. Andy Young (U.S. ambassador to the United Nations) goes around saying he doesn't believe in violence, but what's the alternative? What have we got to show for supporting Washington's peace plans? Is South Africa any better off? Is majority rule any closer in Namibia and Zimbabwe (Rhodesia)?

"THE TRUTH is that if the United States wants credibility in Africa, it will need credibility in Nigeria."

As far back as 1960, the year of Nigeria's independence from Britain, there were predictions that Nigeria, because of its size and its oil wealth, would one day become the leader of all black Africa.

But political instability, a civil war and economic mismanagement slowed this country of 80 million people in its march toward leadership.

THE TURNING point in Nigeria's international independence came in 1975, when Nigeria refused three times to receive Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and rejected President Ford's request that it condemn the Soviet and Cuban involvement in the Angolan civil war.

Instead, Nigeria backed the Soviet-supported faction, largely because South African troops wee fighting inside Angola on behalf of the other two factions. It was then that policymakers in Washington and London began recognizing that Nigeria was attempting to establish itself as the leading black African power.

NOW NIGERIA wants the United States to recognize the Patriotic Front as the legitimate government of Rhodesia and to apply economic sanctions against South Africa, where the United States has about $1.5 billion invested. Some observes believe that that is asking the United States to be more African than Africa is. Many black African states continue to have economic ties with — and dependence on — South

NONETHELESS, Nigeria had placed its hopes on the United States. The dissipation of those hopes was evident in three front-page editorials that appeared on successive days recently in black Africa's largest daily newspaper, The Daily Times of Lagos.

"... Reason, the logic of history and a healthy regard for our own interest as a nation now dictate that we solemnly judge this trust and co-operation (with Washington) to have been fruitless," one of the editorials said.

"Inspiratinal rhetoric and diplomatic theatre apart, the only party that has gained from our suspension of disbelief (in Washington's sincerity) has been the party of the villains" (in South Africa and Rhodesia).

THE EDITORIALS in the 300,000-circulation Daily Times — 60 percent government-owned, but editorially independent — held that American unwillingness to take a more militant stand against the governments of South Africa and Rhodesia was based not on economic or strategic considerations but on "the unavoidable fact ... that for a majority of the American people racial affinity is far more potent an argument than strategic, economic or moral sense."

The editorials had the blessings of the chief of state, Lt. Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, who said in Washington last year:

"SO LONG AS a black man in any part of the world on account of his color suffers any indignity, we share in that suffering. The repression and oppression of one black man is the repression and oppression of all black men.

"Black men will never ascend until the hated system of apartheid and all racial discrimination are eradicated. There can be no peace, no prosperity, indeed no life until that day."

NIGERIAN leaders continue to act as spokesmen for their continent. But their recent expressions of frustration with American policy indicate some doubt that they consider themselves its masters.

Venezuelans to stage neck-to-neck election

By HERNAN MALDONADO

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — The people of Venezuela, one of the two democracies in South America, go to the polls Sunday to vote in a neck-and-neck election for a successor to President Carlos Andres Perez.

THE LATEST polls showed 80 percent of the vote split evenly between Social Democrat Luis Maria Pinerua Ordaz and Christian Democrat Luis Herrera Campins, with eight other candidates sharing the other 20 percent.

The winner of the five-year term will replace Perez, constitutionally barred from succeeding himself despite widespread popularity as the man who nationalized the Venezuelan oil industry, the world's sixth largest.

MORE THAN half the nation's 12.5 million people were expected to take part in the balloting despite a dullish campaign that failed to generate the massive flag-waving rallies of past years.

Both Pinerua and Herrera focused their campaigns on domestic issues, apparently because of criticism of Perez for his heavy involvement in affairs of the Third World and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"WHOEVER becomes president-elect, it is obvious he will have to spend more of his efforts on solving internal problems than on trying to resolve the issues of the Third World," the magazine Resumen said recently.

Both candidates also have shown support for Perez' strong human rights stand, which saw Perez align himself closely with President Carter in criticising heavy-handed Latin American rulers like Nicaragua's Anastasio Somoza.

BUT HERRERA and Pinerua concentrated their campaigning on the deep domestic problems of Venezuela, a nation with a growing middle class but a massive number of impoverished.

A "public service" government is what both candidates promised to answer growing public clamor for more water and electricity services, more schools and hospitals and better streets and highways.

THEY ALSO have vowed a crackdown on government corruption, which has increased since democracy was re-established in Venezuela after the overthrow of dictator Marcos Perez Jimenez in 1958.

Neither is likely to change Venezuela's generally moderate policies on the price of the 2.2 million barrels of oil a day it produces. Its sales to the United States makes it America's third largest source of foreign oil.

PINERUA, 57, a native of the tiny fishing port of Guiria in eastern Venezuela, is a professional politico who rose through the ranks of the Social Democratic party and who says that, although he never earned a university diploma, he is a "graduate of the school of hard knocks."

Herrera, 52, born in the sugar and rice-rich central state of Portugesa, is a lawyer who never has held public office, confining his political activities to the Christian Democratic Party.

THE FOUR leftist presidential candidates — vying not so much to win the election but to lay claim to leadership of the left — are Jose Vicente Rangel of the Movement Toward Socialism party, Americo Martin of the Leftist Revolutionary Movement, Hector Mujica of the Communist Party and Luis Beltran Prieto of the People's Electoral Movement.

THE OTHER candidates are independent Diego Arria, former minister of information and tourism under Perez, Pablo Salas Castillo and Alejandro Gomez Silva, considered stand-ins for Perez Jimenez, and Leonardo Montiel Ortega of the newly established National Renovation movement.

Pipeline spinoff 'billions'

Mini-boom for Canada forecast

EDMONTON (CP)—The Alaska Highway natural-gas pipeline project will provide a market for more than $3 billion worth of Canadian materials and labor and could affect Canada's gross national product by up to one per cent, a Foothills Pipe Lines' official said here.

C. Kent Jespersen, services' vice-president of Foothills (Yukon) Ltd., told an industry briefing that the project will significantly affect the regions where it is built.

"Moreover," he said, "the pipeline is expected to generate at least 60,000 man-years of direct and indirect employment in Canada."

When completed, the pipeline will deliver about 2.4 billion cubic feet of Alaskan gas daily to California and the mid-western U.S. The pipeline now is expected to be completed by fall of 1983, said Murray Stewart, executive vice-president of Foothills.

Jespersen said the operation will yield an annual net benefit of more than $500 million in Canada's U.S. balance of payments.

The pipeline also is designed to accommodate an additional 1.2 billion cubic feet daily of Mackenzie Delta gas which may be injected into the system at Whitehorse for delivery to Canadian markets.

The total project will comprise 7,658 kilometres (4,786 miles) of 56, 48 and 36-inch pipeline, of which 3,243 kilometres will be in Canada, 1,170 kilometres will be in Alaska and 3,533 kilometres south of the 49th parallel.

Capital costs of the Canadian and American portions are estimated at $4.3 billion and $6.4 billion, respectively.

Foothills will oversee building of the Canadian portion of the line through the Yukon, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Co. will be responsible for the Alaska leg while Northern Border Pipline Co., Pacific Gas and Electric Co. and Pacific Gas Transmission Ltd. will look after the portion serving the lower 48 states.

Jespersen said a significant benefit to Canada from the Alaska Highway project will be the provision of a future means of transporting Mackenzie Delta gas through a connecting Dempster Highway lateral connection when Delta reserves are needed.

He said prebuilding the pipeline's southern portion to accommodate short-term exports of Alberta natural gas would result in a more spread-out construction schedule and would have obvious advantages, especially for suppliers.

"It spreads out the time frame in which material, equipment and supplies will be required, enabling suppliers to better plan their output. Smaller firms will be better able to expand their capacity to take part in the market generated by the pipeline."

Stewart said prebuilding economics are "really very good."

Provided National Energy Board and Canadian government approval is granted, he said Alberta gas could be exported to the western U.S. by the fall of 1980 and to the eastern U.S. by 1981.

Jespersen said although Canadian industry has developed considerable expertise in oil and gas-related activities, domestic pipeline firms generally have not had responsibility for large national or international projects to demonstrate their expertise.

"From an industrial perspective, it is our prime objective not only to maximize Canadian content where practical . . . but, in the broader sense, to promote international recognition of our existing expertise."

Harold S. Millican, administrator of the Northern Pipeline Agency, told the briefing that the estimated 26 trillion cubic feet of gas reserves at Prudhoe Bay, Alaska, and 5½ trillion cubic feet in the Mackenzie Delta represent assets of $39 billion and $8 billion, respectively, at a well head price of $1.49 a million cubic feet.

"In the face of rising prices for foreign fuel and the accompanying economic consequences, the availability of a secure supply of domestic natural gas is clearly an attractive alternative," said Millican.

TV breeds strong love-hate relationships

The mother of us all new study indicates

By THOMAS COLLINS
Colonist · Newsday Service

Television is the mother of us all. It doesn't mind if we ignore it. It soothes us when we are lonely. It takes our minds off our troubles. It entertains us — occasionally. It provides a comforting background to other activities. It even instills a certain amount of guilt. Most of all, the great thing about it is that it is there.

At least those are some of the conclusions of an informal study by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting called The Effect of Television on People's Lives, which questioned 96 men and women from 18 to 60 years old in four cities — Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Denver and Houston — on their TV habits and attitudes. Who knows what a psychiatrist would make of the findings, but there obviously is a strong love-hate relationship going on between the public and TV.

Opinion ranged across the board. "It's a friend, a much needed diversion," said one participant.

"When I watch the soap operas, I realize that I don't have it so bad," said another.

"It takes my mind off my work."

"TV can be educational. It can teach you things."

"I watch TV when I have nothing better to do."

"I watch television out of boredom."

"It has made problems for children. They grow up too fast."

"It goes against the American work ethic."

Others called it a nuisance, a timekiller, a threat to family life and a bad influence in general. Positive viewers regarded it as a sort of kindly soul dispensing entertainment and information and praised it as a cheap source of amusement which acted as a window on the world.

Regardless of which position people took, almost all of them were hooked. Many people said they ran the TV set as much as 40 or 50 hours a week even when they weren't watching it. "A great deal of television watching isn't watching at all but rather the use of the set as a sound-making and image-producing presence that would be more noticed by its absence than by any particularities of its presence," the study concluded.

Another finding was that some television watching is regarded as a social necessity and that viewing certain programs is indispensable to holding one's own in the group. "If you hand't seen Roots the night before, you really felt out of it at work or whenever everybody got together," said one interviewee. "At my place, if you don't watch Monday Night Football you're really out of it on the coffee break," said another. Another fellow admitted that he did not like football but watched it anyway so that he could talk about it at work.

Who gets to choose the programs was another area the study touched upon, with husbands and children holding an edge. One generous fellow said that his wife "ruled the set" when he was at work, but that "I get to decide what to watch when I come home in the evening."

A woman said her husband "decides what we watch until he falls asleep." Then the family takes over. Some people said they did not care what was on as long as it was something that would trigger a "dissolve mechanism" in which they could take a temporary leave of absence from the world.

Among the most popular programs mentioned were M-A-S-H, Nova, Phil Donahue, Gunsmoke, Mary Tyler Moore, Rhoda and Charlie's Angels. The most disliked were The Newlywed Game, all situation comedies, Johnny Carson ("because he's so filthy"), Wonder Woman and The Incredible Hulk.

Programs that people believed reflected reality and which they recognized as being highly professional got the best marks, which sound like the most sensible bit of advice that highly paid network programmers could receive. Roots and The Holocaust, for example, were among the shows that had the most lasting impact on viewers, because they "contained so much material that was revelatory and important and because the execution was considered exceptionally skillful."

Public television, despite Upstairs, Downstairs and I, Claudius, still has an image problem with most viewers, who regard it as mainly "educational" rather than entertainment-oriented. Those interviewed said they did not watch it as much as they did the commercial networks because it was difficult and demanding and they can't feel free to read, talk and engage in other activities while it is on.

The mission of the commercial stations, not surprisingly, was seen as mainly one of entertainment. They show more movies, and have more "stars" and colorful production numbers. Public TV, on the other hand, generally uses unknown actors, many of them speaking English dialects that viewers find hard to understand. One person dismissed public TV with the comment that "all the stories happen in the olden days" and usually in England. "It's not up to date like commercial television."

The study is to be taken only as a guide and a preliminary to a nationwide sampling that will take place shortly, a spokesman for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting said. One of its purposes is to better define public TV's image and find out what to do about it.

Better course mix, more guides urged for slow learners

By PAUL De GROOT
Colonist reporter

Better co-ordination of school programs and services and significant expansion of counselling services are among the chief recommendations of a special report on adolescent options for the Greater Victoria school district.

Dated Nov. 7, the report was to have been discussed by the school board at a Nov. 23 meeting, but the meeting was cancelled after the school trustee elections indicated a shift in direction for the board in 1979. It was released to the public on Thursday by the school board.

The basic aims of the adolescent options committee, comprising trustees Dr. Mark Fisher, Glyn Williams and John Young, were to make recommendations for dealing with junior high school students who are significant under-achievers, including emotionally disturbed, learning disabled, and "environmentally deprived" students.

"The committee is of the opinion, however, that the educational system cannot solve all the problems created by family breakdown, poverty, poor parenting, and a host of other societal ills."

Communication should be improved between junior high and elementary schools, the report says, to reduce the anxiety and dislocation which some students experience.

Among the ways the transition can be improved are better co-ordination of elementary and junior high curriculums, consistent Grade 8 and 9 promotion standards, a summer school transition program, and the exchange of teachers and administrators between the two levels.

Schools should also communicate more regularly with community agencies, such as the human resources ministry, which also deal with some pupils.

"The 'at risk' pupil must be identified and adjustments made . . . so that this group of students is accommodated with a better chance of success."

School programs should be modified to provide different levels of instruction in core subjects and greater mobility between programs so that students can mix courses more easily.

Every high school should have a study skills resource centre manned by an experienced learning assistance teachers with good classroom skills.

The report recommends expansion of diagnostic and counselling services in the junior high schools, with the hiring of an additional psychometrician and two teacher specialists who can assess the capability of junior high students and improve remedial programs.

Counselling services in junior high schools should be expanded and improved, the report says. The present ratio of students to counsellors is 340 to one; by September, 1980, the ratio should be brought down to 250 to one, a move which will require employing another 4.5 counsellors at the junior high level.

A full-time co-ordinator of counselling should be appointed to the district. Among other things, this individual would help implement a teacher adviser system in which teachers are assigned to 20 or fewer students to act as "a caring advocate . . . over an extended period of time (two to three years)."

In addition, the selection of counsellors should place greater emphasis on high qualifications, and school staffing formulas should be revised so that counsellors are considered separately from teachers.

The report says each junior high school should be capable of offering in-house alternative programs for students who have different learning abilities and styles.

"Some students function as independent learners; some in very controlled structured environments and still others function best in very sheltered situations."

"For a considerable segment of the student population, the curriculum of the junior high school is restricted by too many required studies which are not essential for adequate living."

Junior high careers programs should be expanded in stages to offer experience in a number of career areas such as automotive, cooking, horticulture, custodial services, day care, haircutting and styling, and construction trades.

Where possible, work experience programs should be offered, with time provided for a teacher in each school to co-ordinate work experience, and the employment of a clerk to place students in work experience so that the district's career counsellor can spend more time with counsellors, teachers and employers.

Some students, however, will require alternative programs outside the regular junior high school, particularly those who are well behind their peers in mastering basic academic subjects, and those whose behavior and attitude require teaching in small groups or even individual tutoring.

These outside alternative programs should be better co-ordinated than they have been in the past, the report says.

"Alternative programs have grown up on an ad hoc basis in Victoria upon the initiatives of several agencies when they perceived a need to provide a rehabilitative program for students." The primary advantage has been an economic one, since the human resources ministry, the attorney-general's department and the Boys' Club of Canada have all contributed facilities, materials equipment and staffing for the programs.

But communication between programs has been poor, resulting in inconsistencies in referrals, placements, budgets and student-staff ratios.

Hopper

'Too many developers' on APC so he resigned

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist reporter

After 10 months of "frustration and getting nowhere," Max Hopper has resigned from Victoria city council's Advisory Planning Commission.

Hopper, a retired James Bay resident, said in an interview Thursday he quit because too many members of the APC had a conflict of interest.

Hopper said too many people on the commission "make their livelihood as developers or builders."

The commission, he said, was so top heavy in favor of development that his voice didn't carry any weight.

Although a number of other members had no affiliation with the building or development industry, Hopper said, he was often the only independent voice at meetings.

"I stuck out like a sore thumb," he said.

Hopper said he believed that APC members should have no connection whatsoever with the development and building industry.

"It got to me and I saw I wasn't getting anywhere," he said.

Hopper was one of several community representatives appointed to the APC last year by Mayor Michael Young.

The mayor said he was sorry to receive Hopper's resignation.

"He made a valuable contribution to the APC and I accept his resignation with regret," he said.

Asked to comment on Hopper's charges that the commission had too many development representatives in its ranks, the mayor pointed out that the APC had "pretty broad community representation."

Apart from himself and four aldermen, the commission had among its members an architect, an accountant, a teacher, a housewife, several businessmen, one contractor and one developer.

The mayor said it was also not valid to simply tag people with their profession. It was equally important to observe how individuals performed on the commission.

"The APC has served council well. It certainly can't have done everything wrong," Young said.

Hopper's vacancy won't be filled until next Wednesday's inaugural meeting when the mayor submits his recommendations for appointments to city council.

Art of napping

Excitement of the opening day of the eighth annual Christmas Crafts Faire was too much for three-month-old Amaya Kerr who decided the best thing to do was catch 40 winks on mom's shoulder. After all, those artisans will be back again today and Saturday in the foyer of the McPherson Playhouse.

Sooke pupils in the clear chamber says

Reports of undisciplined elementary youngsters in Sooke school district elementary schools have prompted about 80 phone calls in the last two days, Nestman said Thursday, many of them from people who are having second thoughts about the small community 35 kilometers west of Victoria.

The confusion comes from that fact that although the school district bears Sooke's name, fully 85 per cent of the school district's enrolment comes from the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area, and that's where the problems students live, Nestman said Thursday.

Nestman phoned every principal in the Sooke area to find out if any of the children in their schools were candidates for an new alternative program scheduled to begin next January to handle students with severe discipline problems.

"Not one student in the entire Sooke area falls into that incorrigible category."

He credited Sooke principals and staff with doing an admirable job, and said the publicity surrounding students at the other end of the school district was damaging to Sooke. As a realtor, Nestman said "the first thing people who are thinking about moving in ask about is how are the schools. We feel the effect of this kind of thing."

Sooke is not the only school district in the area with this kind of problem. The Saanich school district has its headquarters in Sidney. Furthermore, most youngsters in Saanich municipality attend schools in the Greater Victoria school district.

Guess what's coming back

Something has been missing from Victoria for the last eight days—the sun.

It last put in an appearance on Wednesday, Nov. 22, beaming down for six hours and 24 minutes.

However, some brief relief from the predominantly wet, overcast conditions may be in store for the region.

The Pat Bay weather office says that either today or Saturday a high pressure ridge may displace the series of moist low pressure fronts responsible for the wet spell.

If that happens, a cooling, drying trend with periods of sun will result that could last through Sunday.

But another disturbance is building up and could arrive here as early as late Saturday evening.

Incidentally, the wet frontal system Thursday resulted in mild temperatures for the area. Victoria had a recorded high of 8 Celsius, while Tofino and other West Coast points reported 9 C., which was Canada's high for the day.

Oak Bay firefighters gain in 'prevention' but lose on cutbacks

By DON COLLINS, Colonist reporter

Oak Bay firefighters got the sad news in apologetic tones Thursday night: with a single exception, they bad lost the long fight against manpower cutbacks.

And there was an added bitter pill: they had convinced some aldermen of the importance of fire prevention, but only to the point of creating a call for more smoke detectors and fewer firefighters.

Council's three-member fire committee was unanimous in its decision supporting retention of one of four jobs that were to have been eliminated from a total of 31 in the fire department. One man will be retained to provide an improved fire prevention program. His position will be reviewed in 18 months.

That's the proposal that will be made to the full council. But since Mayor Brian Smith was present and agreed, it meant the proposal already had a majority of four on the seven-member council.

The firefighters, guided by Terry Erskine, president of the B.C. Professional Firefighters Association, had drummed up considerable public support in their fight to offset an earlier council decision based on the recommendations of Vancouver consulting firm G.H. Newhouse and Associates. Newhouse said the fire department should drop three of its current 30 members and not retain another job position, already vacant.

The recommendations and council action were based on dollars and cents. The municipality said it was faced with disproportionate firefighting costs, although the risk factor was low.

During its all-out campaign, the firefighters gathered a large petition backing their cause and presented council with a detailed brief.

They argued that human life would be endangered if any more jobs were lost.

The fire committee dealt with the brief and reaction from Newhouse before meeting with the firefighters again Thursday

Ald. Peter Bunn, chairman of the committee, said he fully respected the firefighters and didn't relish the job before him, but that he had to tell them the Newhouse's reaction to their brief upheld the "thrust" on the consultant's original report.

Erskine tried to persuade the committee that council should appoint the yet-to-be named B.C. fire commissioner to bring in a decision based on the facts from both sides, but was told council would be shirking its responsibility by doing so.

The smoke detectors came into the picture when Ald. Doug Watts, who has two in his own home, said: "Despite all the good efforts of you folks, the ordinary citizen is responsible for his own life."

The saving of someone's life in a fire usually happened through a freak incident—such as someone passing the scene at the time and really had nothing to do with a fire department's manpower, Watts said.

But for the most part, he said, the citizen was responsible for his own life.

House may survive

An 1880-vintage house with heritage significance may be saved from the wrecker's hammer because of response by the public to a recent Colonist story, the chairman of Saanich's Heritage Advisory Committee said Thursday.

The brick house at 916 Tolmie faced demolition unless a use could be found for it, Peter Orme told the committee earlier in November.

"Following the item in the paper we received several calls from people interested in saving the old house," he said.

Optional uses ranged from using the building as a restaurant, a realtor's office and a store to sell native arts and crafts.

Orme said the overwhelming response could result in a change of plans by the developer, Stanrick Developments Ltd.

"He is now considering asking that the land, rezoned earlier this year for a 64-unit medium-density apartment building, be rezoned for commercial use," Orme said.

This would mean a broadening of the options available for the future use of the old house, he added.

The two-storey house with its arched windows is one of the very few brick houses remaining in Saanich.

Although it has no particular architectural style, Orme would like to see it retained because of its uniqueness.

Rules tough on students

New unemployment insurance regulations aimed at preventing people from frequently leaving and then re-entering the labor force will cause serious problems for students, the Alma Mater Society at UVic believes.

In a letter to manpower minister Bud Cullen, AMS president Dave Connell said the proposed changes will almost eliminate students from unemployment insurance eligibility during the summer.

Prize collectors stay with garbage

Two Greater Victoria men who won the Western Express Lottery's top prize of $100,000 drawn Nov. 22 said Thursday they'll remain in the garbage collection business.

Don Sled, 42, of 25 Midwood, View Royal, and Real Forcier, 35, of 1335 Chan Place, Colwood, are operators of Sled and Forcier Disposal, a two-truck, two-man business.

Both said they were bombarded with phone calls from well-wishers Thursday when they returned home after work. Sled had four calls in the first 10 minutes at home, and Forcier had three in five minutes.

Both men also said they would continue picking up garbage and had no immediate plans for a big holiday.

Forcier said he wanted to wait until "things get settled down first" before making any decisions. Sled said he would "absolutely" remain a garbageman. He said there was no thought of taking time off because it was such a small operation both of them were needed to carry on.

Both men are married.

Mayor's lesson: revamp system

A radical change in the committee structure of Saanich council will be unveiled Monday by Mayor Mel Couvelier at the inaugural meeting of the 1979 council.

"We will be switching to a type of committee of the whole system in an effort to come to grips with managing the affairs of the municipality," he said in an interview.

"The only way we can achieve this goal is by involving all aldermen in discussion at the committee level."

The mayor, who held an informal meeting with his new council Wednesday, said the failure of this year's council to make any noticeable progress and come to grips with major issues, was responsible for the changes he was planning.

"I'm not happy with our progress this year," he said, "but the failures taught me lessons I know will be beneficial to me next year."

Council members, he said, were agreed that the municipality's community plan should have priority and be completed as soon as possible next year.

There would also be a continuing thrust in improving the level of services in public works, by faster attention to potholes and other routine problems.

Aldermen-elect also said they wanted to explore methods of improving community relations, he said, a proposal which could see the hiring of a community affairs relations officer.

Couvelier said he fully expected the industrial development issue to surface again early next year.

On a personal note, he said he favored redevelopment of the Tillicum outdoor theatre site, but this did not necessarily mean he supported a proposal for a 295,000 square foot shopping centre on the land.

Of critics who told him he was moving too quickly or trying for the impossible, Couvelier said: "Man's reach should always exceed his grasp."

A series of neighborhood council meetings initiated by this year's council would be continued as a means of keeping the community involved and informed.

However, he admitted concern over community response to affairs of the municipality.

"I'm worried it's going to decline now that citizens are beginning to feel comfortable in the feeling they have a council responsive to their needs."

As a means of renewing public interest, he said he would support a proposal by Ald. John Mika that agendas be published in advance of council and committee meetings.

Former sawmill worker granted rights hearing

By NANCY BROWN
Colonist reporter

Former sawmill worker Janice Foster has been granted an appearance before a board of inquiry into her claim that B.C. Forest Products Ltd. discriminated against her by not hiring her.

University of Victoria law professor Jim McPherson will hear the case, but no date has yet been set for the hearing.

Foster, who had worked in a Tahsis sawmill at one time, moved to the Cowichan Valley and applied for work in the mill there. She was not hired, although she saw inexperienced men being hired. She claimed that she was not hired because she was a woman.

She complained to the B.C. Human Rights branch, and although the branch thought her claim was valid, it was impossible to get a settlement from the company.

The matter was referred to Labor Minister Allan Williams last July with a request that a board of inquiry be appointed.

The minister has also appointed a board of inquiry to look into a Port Alberni man's complaint against Flying Industries Forest Tankers Ltd. of Port Alberni.

Thomas Kellough, a pilot with the company, was forced to retire from his job because he had reached the age of 60.

Kellough, who had regular medical checkups, said he was still fit to fly, and should not have been forced to leave his job because of his age.

A hearing date has been set for Dec. 12 and 13, but the company has claimed that it should come under federal rather than provincial jurisdiction, and a Supreme Court hearing has been scheduled for Dec. 4 to decide on jurisdiction.

'Monster of own creation'

The core municipalities are beginning to have problems with a monster of their own creation, a union official said Thursday of the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association.

Expressing astonishment at what he said was an attempt to limit time off for union negotiations, Rick Doyle said: When they set up the GVLRA to deal with many locals at the same time they found 18 to 21 employees had to be off at once to bargain with them.

"I guess they're afraid of what it would mean to the taxpayers. But it's their Frankenstein. They'll have to deal with it."

Doyle, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees local covering Victoria's inside staff, said a seven-page document from GVLRA manager Carl Anshelm proposes contract standardization that would limit leave of absence for union officers to 20 days.

It was unheard of, he said, and would literally mean—if accepted—that union negotiating teams in the future would have to change personnel in mid-negotiations.

However, some of the others preparing for what looks like a tough round of post controls bargaining, aren't paying much attention to the time-off proposal. They are inclined to treat it lightly on the theory that it is frivolous and will be quickly discarded.

That didn't prevent some consternation Thursday as CUPE's Big Five (the Joint Negotiating Committee) prepared for its initial meeting with Anshelm.

Jim Walker, president of the Victoria outside workers' local, said a late directive from the city ruled that all leaves of absence would have to be cleared through city hall ahead of the meetings.

"I'll tell you, if that hadn't been cleared up there wouldn't have been any meeting with Anshelm today," Walker said.

Wheels apparently began to turn following word of the development and Walker said he was told that the intent of the directive had been "misinterpreted."

The joint council, which covers the outside workers, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt municipal employees, two Greater Victoria School Board locals, and one from the capital region, will spend next Tuesday studying Anshelm's document.

Three locals, including Doyle's, are bargaining independently.

Doyle, saying the GVLRA is offering an 11 per cent wage and fringe benefit increase over two years, isn't happy. He says CUPE members have fallen about 10 percentage points behind the cost of living over the last two years.

Canadians jump to lead in World Cup golf

PRINCEVILLE, Hawaii (AP) — Dave Barr of Kelowna, a rookie on the Professional Golfers' Association tour, fired a five-under-par 67 for the individual lead and combined with Dan Halldorson of Brandon to give Canada a surprise spot at the top of the team competition Thursday in the uncompleted first round of the World Cup golf tournament.

Halldorson, who regained his tour card last month and will rejoin the pro tour next year, had a 70 in the balmy island weather, giving Canada a 137 total.

"It would mean a lot of prestige to win this and maybe silence some of the critics of Canadian golf," the 26-year-old Barr said.

The long day's play was halted by darkness with six teams stranded on the course. The teams from Ireland, Venezuela, Burma, Finland, Belgium and Yugoslavia marked their positions on the course and will complete their first-round play this morning before the start of the second round. None appeared to have a chance to move among the leaders.

The Philippines team was second on the list of two-man teams from 48 countries in this goodwill event. Eleuterio Nival, with a 69, and Rudy Lavares, with a 70, were two shots back at 139.

The United States, represented by PGA champ John Mahaffey and ailing U.S. Open titleholder Andy North, were tied for third with Argentina at 141, four shots behind the leaders.

"We're in good position," said Mahaffey. "We're gonna be all right. But Andy is awful sick. I don't know what it is, a cold or virus or what, but he's very tired and can barely talk. But, boy, was he grinding out there. He got off to a bad start, but he was grinding. You could see it in his eyes."

Mahaffey shot a 69 on the 6,940-yard Makai course on this westernmost island of the Hawaiian chain and North birdied the final hole to match par 72.

Spain, which has won the last two World Cups with Severiano Ballesteros playing a major part in the victories, was well back at 145. Ballesteros declined to compete this year in the event that offers $2,000 to the winner, much less than the prize in most tournaments. Manuel Pinero had a 72 and Antonio Garrido a 73 for the defending champions.

Mahaffey, who one-putted five times on the front nine, and Nival were tied for second in the individual competition with their 69s. The group at 70 included Vicente Fernandez of Argentina, Kim Suck Bong of South Korea, Halldorson and Lavares.

Barr, who finished 133rd on the American money-winning list this year, didn't make a bogey, holed two putts from about 20 feet, got another birdie from eight feet, twice hit irons inside of four feet and could have been even better, missing a pair of birdie putts from about eight feet.

Bruins maintain streak by turning back Sabres

Montreal Canadiens, successful to the point they are resented almost as much as they are admired, have been tagged as a dynasty too good for the good of the NHL. But no such feelings exist about the Boston Bruins, yet the records show that in the last eight seasons the Bruins are only a small step behind the defending Stanley Cup champions.

About the only difference in club records since the start of the 1970-71 season is that Canadiens have won the Stanley Cup four times while the Bruins have won it only once.

In schedule play, however, there is practically no difference. The Bruins have won six division titles and finished second twice while Canadiens have topped their division five times, finished second once and third twice. Canadiens barely balance that small edge by leading in victories, but only by 409-402. Over the eight years, the Canadiens with a 409-116-107 log against the Bruins' 402-148-82 performance, have averaged only five more points a season than the Boston club.

And things are about the same this year. When the Bruins edged Buffalo Sabres 4-3 Thursday night for a fifth win in an unbeaten run now at six games, they went slightly ahead of Canadiens for the season. The Bruins have 31 points from 22 games for a better percentage than Canadiens, who have 32 points from 23 games.

Now three points ahead of Toronto Maple Leafs with two games in hand, the division-leading Bruins got a stiff argument from the Sabres for two periods and needed some excellent goalkeeping from rookie Jim Pettie to hold at 2-2. But the disciplined Boston club took over in the third period, allowing only four shots at Pettie while blasting 20 at Bob Sauve.

John Wensink, a burly winger who scored only 16 goals last season while drawing 181 penalty minutes in his role as an enforcer, put the Bruins ahead early in the third period with his 11th goal of the season and veteran Wayne Cashman followed with the winning shot less than two minutes later.

In Thursday's other game, Philadelphia Flyers, a last-place club with more points than all but two clubs not in their division, tightened things up a bit in the tough Patrick Division by shutting out St. Louis Blues, 3-0.

With 28 points from their first 24 games, the Flyers are four points behind the co-leaders with a game in hand on Atlanta Flames but three games closer to the end of the schedule than New York Islanders.

Blake Dunlop, most valuable player in the American Hockey League last season, and team-leader Bobby Clarke both had a goal and an assist in the easy win over the club with the poorest defence record in the league.

Thw Blues, who have allowed 119 goals in 15 games, held their own in a 1-0 first period but managed only six shots against Wayne Stephenson in the last two periods.

Dunlop opened the scoring at 17:20 of the first period, backhanding a rebound of Bob Dailey's shot past goaltender Ed Staniowski. The second period was scoreless and the Flyers put it away with goals 33 seconds apart early in the third period.

Dunlop, who has 11 points in the 11 games he has played this season, and Clarke combined to set up rookie Behn Wilson for the 2-0 goal at 4:11 and Clarke, with Dailey drawing his second assist, banged in his own rebound at 4:47.

Yankees deny story of trade for Carew

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees strongly denied a published report Thursday that they were trying to work out a trade with Minnesota to obtain Twins star first baseman Rod Carew.

"Absolutely, totally, unequivocally untrue," Yankees president Al Rosen said when asked about a story in the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press which said the deal involved the Yankees sending first baseman Chris Chambliss, outfielder Juan Beniquez, pitcher Ken Clay and $400,000 to the Twins for Carew.

"We've got a good first baseman here already," Rosen said of Chambliss. "If you look at his RBIs (90), his homers (12), his batting average (.274) and his ability to play every day, and this year he was a golden glover, and he's only 30 years old, you get the idea he knows how to play baseball.

"We have had no talks with Minnesota involving any of the players mentioned—and that includes Carew," Rosen added.

Phillies dropped from Rose list

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia Phillies announced Thursday that they are no longer negotiating to acquire Pete Rose, baseball's veteran superstar in search of a new uniform for next season.

"We have made an offer that would have made Pete the highest paid player in Phillies history," club owner Ruly Carpenter told a press conference. "Unfortunately it was not quite enough.

"He didn't get into the game of one-upsmanship for which I have the greatest admiration. He's a great player and I wish him the best."

The Phillies for some time had been considered the front runner in the Rose sweepstakes with a reported offer of $1.8 million over three years.

The 37-year-old Rose, who owns the modern National League record hitting streak of 44 straight games, has been searching for a new team since he played out his option after 15 years as a star infielder-outfielder with Cincinnati Reds.

Since returning last week from an exhibition tour with the Reds in Japan, Rose has visited Atlanta, Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburgh. San Diego and New York Mets also made overtures, but are no longer in the running.

Rose said the Phillies' offer was "a tremendous one, but it wasn't what I thought I could get from a couple of the other ball clubs."

Asked who the front runner is now, Rose replied, "I don't think there is a front runner. We're down to four—three in the National League and one in the American League—and I've said all along I'd like to stay in the National League and beat Stan Musial's record."

Musial holds the National League record for career hits of 3,630.

Atlanta Braves, St. Louis Cardinals and Pittsburgh Pirates are the three National League clubs still in the running. In the American League, Kansas City Royals have been in contact with Rose.

Rose said he could not rule out reopening negotiations with the Phillies but added, "It doesn't look good right now that I'll be playing in a Phillies uniform."

Earlier in the day, New York Mets announced that they were withdrawing from the Rose competition, saying the switch-hitter had turned down a package deal offer in excess of $2 million.

Sparky Anderson, fired this week as Reds' manager, told the Indianapolis News Rose called him Wednesday night and said "the offers were getting bigger and bigger."

Hawks, Bruins win

Portland Winter Hawks widened their Western Division lead Thursday and New Westminster Bruins moved closer to second-place Victoria Cougars in Western Hockey League action.

Winter Hawks opened up a six-point lead over the Cougars, idle until a Saturday game here with Seattle Breakers, by beating the host Breakers 3-2.

Meanwhile, in Edmonton, the travelling Bruins bombed their hosts 7-1. They're now only three points back of Victoria, with five games in hand.

Bruins scored on their first two shots on goal, then went on to pummel the Oil Kings before 3,588 fans.

Pat McGill scored on a 40-footer from the slot and then deflected a slapshot from the point on a power-play to start the Bruins to their first win after two setbacks on a road trip.

Overskate earns honors

Merchants, A's tie

Four players scored three goals each Thursday night as Juan de Fuca Merchants and Victoria Athletics fought to a 9-9 South Island Big Six Hockey League tie at Pearkes Arena.

Barry McLachlan and Dan Walushka scored three for Juan de Fuca while Kevin Kennedy and John Entzminger had three each for Victoria.

Jeff Whitney-Griffiths, with two, and Andy Konopacki rounded out Merchants scoring while Bruce Cowick, Ross McKistry and Brian Preston scored one each for Athletics. Cowick added four assists.

Pre-season promise paying off for Dolcetti

By TOM KEYSER

He's still tall (six-feet-eight) and he's still talented. But that's not news.

No, Reni Dolcetti hasn't grown an inch since his inaugural campaign with University of Victoria Vikings. And he's working with pretty much the same tools that allowed him to finish sixth in scoring in the Canada West men's basketball conference for 1977-78.

Something different, though, has been added. Dolcetti, who averaged 14.5 points a game last year and led the conference in field-goal accuracy, is newly committed—to his team, to his coach and to basketball.

"Before the season started, I made a commitment to myself and the team. I wasn't particularly pleased with my contribution last year so I decided to do something about it," said the articulate giant prior to a Thursday workout at UVic.

Some commitment. Dolcetti leads the CWUAA with an average of 21.8 points a game. He's scored 131 points in six starts.

Moved over from centre to accomodate freshman Gerald Kazanowski, Dolcetti, now a forward, has turned into a devastating shooting threat from the outside.

And he's gained consistency.

"That was my biggest concern. Last year, I wasn't playing up to my capabilities all the time."

Dolcetti was a third-year transfer from Sudbury's Laurentian Voyageurs. He left hometown Sudbury to reunite with UVic coach Ken Shields—"the first coach to ever inspire me"—and for a change of scene.

Shields didn't expect miracles from the 22-year-old he had coached during Dolcetti's freshman year at Laurentian. But the coach figures everone else did.

"I told Reni when he came out here people were going to expect a lot from him right away. But I thought it would take him about a year to make the adjustment."

It did. Dolcetti's scoring touch is filling the hole left in Vikings' offence by the departure of defending conference scoring champ Billy Loos.

"Reni's playing his best basketball ever for me," continued Shields. "He's showing much more consistency and he's going to be even better by the end of the season."

Now 23, Dolcetti refuses to take all the credit for his getaway. He showers most of it on scatter-gun guard Robbie Parris, in his fifth and final year at UVic.

"Robbie's a real key to my play. He feeds me the ball, he opens up a lot of holes and he makes things happen. Inch for inch, he's the best guard in the country."

If the five-foot-eight Parris keeps opening holes and Dolcetti keeps shooting through them, UVic figures to improve on its 5-1 conference record, good for first place, after the Christmas break.

And, if he keeps his new committment in mind, Reni Dolcetti's better than an even bet to give UVic its second scoring leader in two seasons.

HOOPLA — Vikings don't play another inter-conference game until Jan. 12, when Calgary Dinosaurs visit McKinnon Gym. But they won't get much of a break. This weekend, Winnipeg Wesmen are at UVic for a rare Sunday night appearance. Winnipeg, which lost 84-72 to UVic in a meeting at Winnipeg this fall. The men's game at 8:30 p.m. follows a UVic-Winnipeg women's exhibition at 6:30 p.m....Following that, Vikings play host Dec. 8 to Athletes in Action—"the best basketball team in Canada", according to Shields—then, after 10-day break from practice, travel to Salem, Ore., for the John Lewis Classic Dec. 21-22, to Winnipeg for the Wesman Classic Dec. 28-30, and to Calgary for the Calgary Classic Jan. 4-6. Kathy Shields' Vikettes, at UBC for a weekend tournament, fly to Winnipeg for games Dec. 3-4, then go to Simon Fraser for a tournament Dec. 28-30. They play Victoria Home Lumber Dec. 8 as a preliminary to the AIA-Vikings encounter and resume conference play Jan. 5 in Edmonton...St. Mary's Huskies, Canadian collegiate champions, will be among the competition for Vikings at Winnipeg and Calgary. In a recent exhibition, Huskies lost by only 20 points to Duke University, ranked No. 1 in the NCAA by Sports Illustrated...Shields is concerned with Vikings' inconsistency, saying some veterans are "taking things for granted. We have to improve our concentration in practice." Shields anticipated last Saturday's first season loss to the Pronghorns in Lethbridge. "We were complacent and I could see it coming. You can't afford to be complacent in this league."

CUTTHROAT TROUT FISHING in all Vancouver Island streams will be banned from Dec. 1 to March 31, as usual and according to published information in Sport Fishing Regulations. Brown trout in Cowichan River also continue as a catch and release fishery until the end of March. But lakes will still be open for sport fishing.

There was a snarl-up in the story in the Colonist's Island edition Tuesday which indicated creeks and lakes on Vancouver Island would be closed to sports fishing for four months. It isn't so. Streams only will be closed and only for cutthroat trout fishing. You may still fish for Dolly Vardens, rainbows, steelhead, even salmon in Vancouver Island rivers, as detailed in regulations.

Secretary Island, Beechey Head, Bedford Islands and Church Rock waters have been giving up limits of mostly small chinooks in the four to five-pound range, but a few bigger ones.

Pedder Bay anglers, fishing from the kelp beds and around to Church Rock, have been getting limits, very deep, with red Hot Spot flashers, and fluorescent and opaque No. 36 Silver Harvest Needlefish a good combination.

Victoria-Constance Banks-Oak Bay waters have all been good, but the fish are mostly small.

Salmon have been hard to find in Saanich Inlet and when you do find them they have been mostly small and at two levels — 40 feet and 200 feet — and not much in between. Harmon Leong won the Chinook Club Frostbite Derby Sunday with a nine-pounder from the Stone House. Wally Fenske was second with an 8.6-pounder from Bamberton, and Gerry McPherson third with a 3.5-pounder. Hidden weight winners were John Rose, Win Rose, Bob Redgrave and Les Leacock.

George Nosky reports lots of winter chinooks in Nanaimo waters; from two to four pounds, but some up to 15 pounds. Anglers have been going very deep with green hootchies or herring strip off Entrance and Snake Islands and Five Fingers Island towards the beach.

Drift fishermen and trollers have been clicking in Nanoose waters, with some being taken off the naval docks. Power moochers have been clicking in Nettail Bay and Northwest Bay.

VICTORIA FISH AND GAME CLUB will hold its annual Christmas turkey shoot at the Malahat complex Dec. 9 and 10.

With uncertain river conditions for Saturday and Sunday, Canoe Club members are asked to phone for information about possible river paddles ... Fred Potter, 652-2146; Bob Cain, 595-1115; Dave Suttill, 384-3588, or Doug Collis, 592-2309. Dec. 10 the club plans a paddle on Quamichan Lake, near Duncan. Dec. 5 the Canoe Club will hold its annual Christmas pot luck supper and slide show, 7:30 p.m. in the upper hall of St. Martin's in the Field Church at 550 Obed Street.

National and Provincial Parks Association (B.C. Chapter) will sponsor a public meeting 7:30 p.m. Dec. 7 at the Maritime Museum auditorium in Bastion Square to discuss the Southern Moresby Island (Queen Charlottes) logging and wilderness park controversy. The public is invited.

A panel will include representatives from provincial parks branch, Islands protection committee, ecological reserves committee, Rayonier company, and the IWA. The B.C. forest service and the environmental land use committee have declined to send representatives to sit on the panel.

CHRISTMAS TRAP SHOOTS this year will have a sad note. George Clark won't be there with his happy chuckle and willing help for the novices. George was killed in a car accident last week and on Monday Holy Trinity Anglican Church at Sooke was filled to standing room only as his many friends gathered to say a prayer, sing a couple of hymns and bid farewell.

George was a former head ranger of the South Vancouver Island Rangers, a member of the old Victoria Gun Club, a keen scattergunner on the trap range and in the field, a fisherman, and a friend of just about everybody.

Auditor starts swindle probe after longshot draws interest

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — A quick-witted auditor, who noticed a dramatic change in betting odds in a horse race at Waterford Park in Chester, W.Va., has led authorities to uncover a swindle that may have been used in six states, the chairman of the West Virginia Racing Commission said Thursday.

A horse entered as Born a Great Count in the 10th race at Waterford on Nov. 11—and originally listed as a 30-1 longshot—actually was Baybantim, a much better horse, commission chairman William Watson said Thursday. The horse finished second.

There was also an entry purporting to be Born a Great Count in the fifth race at the Barrington Fairgrounds in Great Barrington, Mass., on Sept. 24, Watson said. But that horse was neither Baybantim nor Born a Great Count.

"Nobody knows where Born a Great Count is; whether he is alive or not," Watson said.

Baybantim has been impounded at Waterford and the FBI has entered the investigation, Watson said. Investigators have been led to possible swindles in Kentucky, Ohio, Michigan and Illinois, he added.

Nobody has been arrested in the Waterford Park case, but the racing commission has suspended the licence of David Wilkerson of Chester, a trainer and horse owner who made the Born a Great Count entry at Waterford. Wilkerson has asked for a hearing on that suspension, Watson said.

State auditor Joseph Cuomo, stationed in the computer room at Waterford, was the first to notice something wrong in the 10th race, Watson said.

"He was very alert. He noticed an unusual betting pattern going on in this race. The odds on this horse were 30-1. Then, all at once, they dropped to 20-1, then . . . to 6-1."

Apparently, one person placed $800 in bets on a trifecta involving Born a Great Count, Watson said. In a trifecta, a bettor picks the top three finishers.

"It's not often that you put that kind of money on a long shot," Watson said.

After the horse's second-place finish, officials obtained the name of the man who cashed the winning ticket, Watson added. The horse was impounded and an investigation was launched.

An official of the Jockey Club went to the track with the true copy of Born a Great Count's papers. The registration number on the papers did not match the number tatooed on the horse, Watson said. However, the tatoo number did match the one listed for Baybantim.

Baybantim had last raced at the end of October in a $6,000 race at Thistle Downs in Cleveland, meaning he was a better horse than those entered in the $2,500 race at Waterford, Watson said.

Watson said Baybantim's owner, George Bowyers of Cleveland, said he bought the horse for $6,000 at Thistle Downs, then had him shipped to Florida at which time the animal disappeared.

Track fire was arson

CHICAGO (AP) — A multi-million-dollar fire that destroyed the grandstand and clubhouse area at Hawthorne racetrack was set by arsonists and may be linked to a suspected "ringer" scheme, investigators said Thursday.

The fire on Nov. 19 caused an estimated $10- to $14-million damage.

Tyrone Fahner, director of the state department of law enforcement, said "some sort of liquid accelerant" was found on three wooden floors of the racetrack. He said tests are being run to determine if the liquid was gasoline or oil.

Fahner said investigators are looking into the possibility that the fire was set in connection with a suspected horse substitution case.

The Sun-Times said Thursday it has learned the FBI has been tracing the movements of two horses that won races at Hawthorne in what was believed to be a substitution scheme.

One of the horses won a race under the name of Charolius on the day before the fire. The horse actually was a superior horse called Roman Decade, investigators said they later determined. Charolius paid $10.80, $8.20 and $5.60 across the board.

O.J. out for season

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — O. J. Simpson's bid to top Jim Brown's career rushing record received another setback Thursday when San Francisco '49ers placed the 31-year-old running back on the injured reserve list for the final three games of the 1978 National Football League season.

Although he has missed the last three games with a shoulder separation, Simpson still leads the '49ers in rushing with 593 yards and ranks third on the team in passes caught with 21.

"We feel it is important for O.J. to get completely well and come to camp fully prepared to play next season," said San Francisco general manager Joe Thomas.

"At this stage of the season, I think that it is important to do whatever I can to get ready to help this team win next season, and I want everyone to know that I will be back next year," Simpson said.

"I know that I can contribute, and if I can begin rehabilitation work now, instead of taking a beating for the next three games, I know that I will be ready."

Simpson's career total of 10,776 yards rushing ranks second in NFL history behind Brown, the former Cleveland Browns great who ran for 12,312 in nine years before retiring after the 1965 season.

Tight end Ken McAfee was also placed on the injured reserve list Thursday. The team's first-round selection in the 1978 draft, McAfee was the San Francisco's second-leading receiver after 13 games with 22 catches.

He was injured in Monday night's loss to Pittsburgh Steelers, suffering torn ligaments in his left knee, and will be in a cast for three months.

A pair of free agents were signed to replace Simpson and McAfee on the roster—tight end Lon Boyett from Cal-State Northridge and guard Tony Ardizzone from Northwestern.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Rookie sensation Nancy Lopez has been named the outstanding woman golfer of the year and Tom Watson repeated as the male player of the year, the Golf Writers of America announced Thursday.

Lopez shattered Judy Rankin's single-season record of $150,734 in earnings.

U.S. breezes into Federation Cup eights

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Teen-ager Tracy Austin and Chris Evert had little trouble Thursday as the top-seeded United States team cruised into the quarter-finals with an effortless win over New Zealand in the $130,000 Federation Cup tennis tournament.

Austin downed Brenda Perry, 6-1, 6-2, and Evert crushed Judy Chalenor, 6-1, 6-1. The victories gave the U.S. an insumountable 2-0 lead in the best-of-three-matches tourney and Evert combined with Billy Jean King in the doubles for an American sweep, beating Chaloner and Christine Newton, 6-1, 6-1.

A young West German, Sylvia Hanika, threw a scare into the Great Britain team when she whipped Britain's No. 2 player, Sue Barker, 6-3, 6-2.

The hard-hitting Hanika, who turned 19 today, gave West Germany a 1-0 lead. But Great Britain recovered to advance to the quarter-finals when Virginia Wade thrashed Heidi Eisterlehner, 6-0, 6-3, and then combined with Barker to stop Hanika and Katja Ebbinghaus, 6-3, 6-0, in the crucialdoubles match.

Barker, showing no signs of her injured back and left leg, was completely overpowered by the West German girl.

In other matches, Australia defeated Japan 3-0, Czechoslovakia beat Indonesia 3-0, France upset eighth-seeded Argentina 3-0, the Soviet Union crushed Yugoslavia 3-0, Holland over Chile 3-0 and Romania ousted Switzerland 2-1.

In the consolation Plate competition, involving first round losers, Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa evened the set with Belgium at 1-1, defeating Michele Gurdal 8-6, then joined Lise Senn of Toronto for a 9-7 doubles win over Gurdal and Monique Van Haver.

Wendy Barlow of Victoria lost the opening singles match, 8-6, to Van Haver. The Plate competition is decided on one-set matches with an eight-game minimum.

Lindblad off to Mariners

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees assigned the contract of left-handed relief pitcher Paul Lindblad to Seattle Mariners Thursday.

Lindblad's name was removed from the Yankees' roster last week when they signed free-agent pitcher Tommy John. In 1978 Lindblad pitched for Texas Rangers and the Yanks.

'Little Mule' gets hero's welcome from Kentucky

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Paul Mallory estimates he has helped deliver about 175 foals in his years as farm manager of White Horse Acres.

Three of those foals arrived Feb. 15, 1974, including the scrawny first offspring of My Charmer. The foal was distinguished only by its ugliness.

Mallory's wife, Christine, helped with the delivery and, as was her custom, took a snapshot of the new arrival.

"Every time I took a picture, I'd say, 'Here comes another (Kentucky) Derby winner,'" she said. "But Paul said, 'You may as well throw that picture away. He looks like a little mule.'"

The Little Mule tag stuck until, as a yearling, the son of Bold Reasoning was sold at the Fasig-Tipton Kentucky sales for $17,500.

His new owners named him Seattle Slew.

Despite his inauspicious beginning, Seattle Slew had a phenomenal career, in 1977 becoming the only undefeated Triple Crown winner in thoroughbred racing history.

The Mallorys were among dozens of guests who thronged to Spendthrift Farm on Thursday—Seattle Slew Day in Kentucky by proclamation of Governor Julian Carroll—for a reception honoring the latest addition to Brownell Combs II's stallion corps

Slew, syndicated for $12 million, will stand at stud at the famous farm that also is home to J. O. Tobin, Nashua, Majestic Prince, Exclusive Native, Gallant Man, Wajima and several others.

Mallory, 54, was visibly moved as he watched Slew prance outside his stall and recalled how he kept track of his ugly duckling foal.

Once Slew began running, it wasn't hard to follow his progress, he said.

"After he went to Maryland to break, we found out Mickey (Taylor) and Dr. (James) Hill got him and took him to New York," Mallory said. "We got reports that they had an extra good 2-year-old."

"The phone kept ringing when he started winning," said Mrs. Mallory. "Sometimes we couldn't sleep at night for the telephone."

Mallory said he wasn't surprised that Slew brought a meager price as a yearling.

"He was good looking by the time he was a yearling, but the mare hadn't had anything before him, so you couldn't tell about her. And she had only won about $38,000. We thought $17,000 was a good price."

Mrs. Mallory did not follow her husband's advice of 1974. She kept the pictures of the ugly foal and now sells the prints.

"I haven't made any money, but it's been a lot of fun," she said.

Meanwhile, in New York, the former trainer of Seattle Slew filed a lawsuit in federal court Thursday against the former owners of the horse, demanding $1.2 million, the equivalent of 10 per cent of the proceeds from the horse's sale.

In addition, trainer Billy Turner sued in the United States District Court in Brooklyn for the right to breed a mare with the throughbred, a right worth $80,000. He said it is customary in the thoroughbred industry to give the trainer such a breeding right.

The suit had been filed in state Supreme Court in Mineola. But because Turner is a New York resident and the owners, Karen and Mickey Taylor of Washington and Jim and Sally Hill of Florida, are from out of state, he refiled the suit in federal court.

The complaint alleges that the owners made an verbal promise to give Turner a 10 per cent cut from the resale of the horse in October, 1975. He was fired in December, 1977, and said the owners have refused to pay off on their promise.

Aussie leads in Kiwi golf

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP) — Australian Jack Newton carded a four-under-par 66 Thursday for a one-stroke lead over Americans Bob Risch and Vance Heafer and three other players after the first round of a $75,000 golf tournament at Titirangi.

Also at 67 were New Zealand's Bob Charles and Australians Bruce Devlin and David Graham. Rafe Botts and Art Russell of the U.S. and Brian Barnes of Britain and 68, followed by Ted Ball and Kel Nagle of Australia, Bob Douglas and Sandy Galbraith of the U.S. and Stuart Reese of New Zealand.

Roger Klatt of St. Albert, Alta., fired an opening-round 72 and was in a group with American veteran Arnold Palmer. Bob Beauchemin of Victoria was another shot off the pace.

Aaron off to good start

BARRANQUILLA, Colombia (AP) — American Tommy Aaron shot a one-under-par 71 on Thursday to grab the first-round lead in the $13,000 Colombia Open golf championship in this city in northern Colombia.

Peter Townsend and Malcolm Grepson, both of Britain, and Colombian Clever Mendez were tied at 72.

Sandy Lyle of Britain shot 73, while Buddy Gardner of the U.S. was at 74. Britain's Tony Jacklin was well back at 77.

Investigation in limbo

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A Milan magistrate investigating the Grand Prix of Italy crash which took the life of Swedish Formula One race car driver Ronnie Peterson said Thursday he would decide by the end of the year whether to drop the case or issue indictments.

Armando Spataro, a Milan deputy state attorney, made his remarks after completing the questioning of the eyewitnesses, including British driver James Hunt, to the Sept. 10 pileup of cars at the start of the race in nearby Monza. Peterson, whose Lotus car caught fire, died the next day.

Sharon, Gibby in front

LARGO, Fla. (AP) — "I wasn't swinging well, he boosted me all the way," said Sharon Miller of team-mate Gibby Gilbert after the two combined for a seven-under-par 65 Thursday to take a one-stroke lead into today's second round of the $300,000 mixed teams golf championship.

Close behind were Dave Eichelberger and Alexandra Reinhardt and Lon Hinkle and Pat Bradley, each with a 18-hole team totals of 66.

In a three-way tie at 67 were Bobby Wadkins and JoAnn Washam, Bill Garrett and Kathy McMullen, and Jerry Heard and Penny Pulz.

Defending champions Jerry Pate and Hollis Stacy were in an 11-way tie at 69, three under par. Sandra Post, a native of Oakville, Ont., now living in Boynton Beach, Fla., teamed with Bill Kratzert for a 71.

Murdoch prefers NHL if suspension lifted

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. (CP) — Don Murdoch is taking a positive approach to his forthcoming talks with New York Rangers and a possible early return to the National Hockey League team.

Murdoch, the talented Ranger winger handed a year's suspension by NHL president John Ziegler after pleading guilty in a Brampton, Ont., court last April to a drug possession charge, doesn't foresee any problems evolving from talks with New York general manager-coach Fred Shero this weekend.

His agent, Frank Milne of the world-wide International Management Group, said earlier this week if the Rangers refused to renegotiate Murdoch's contract the player would be free to look elsewhere when his suspension is cleaned up.

A rider in Ziegler's suspension called for a review of the situation after the Rangers had played about 40 games—half the season—and said the NHL could commute the suspension if Murdoch conducted himself properly during that time.

If the NHL reviews Murdoch in a favorable light and if IMG renegotiates the three-year contract he signed with the Rangers in his rookie year, Murdoch could be in a New York uniform in January.

"I have a clause in my contract which says if I scored more than 50 goals in my first two years they will renegotiate," Murdoch told the Hamilton Spectator this week as he prepared for his return to New York by working out with Niagara Falls Flyers of the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League.

"I scored 59 (32 in his rookie season before being sidelined late in the year with an arm injury) and they (Rangers) haven't said they will (renegotiate) or they won't.

"I'm not worried though," he added, "because I have confidence I can play in the NHL. A few World Hockey Association clubs are interested, but as long as I can play, I'd like to play in New York."

While he is confident the talks with Shero will be worked out satisfactorily and that he can eventually resume his career with the Rangers, what does worry Murdoch is how long it will take him to regain his form and whether the fans and media in New York will accept the idea he's paid the price.

Murdoch

The 22-year-old native of Cranbrook was fined $400 after pleading guilty to possession of a small quantity of cocaine before Ziegler imposed the additional year's suspension.

He had been working out with the Cranbrook senior team, but since it was limited to three-a-week practices, Murdoch found it difficult to maintain a suitable training program and started skating with the juniors here 11 days ago.

"It's going to be tough when I step on the (Madison Square) Garden ice for the first time," he admitted to the Spectator. "It's going to be like getting drafted all over again.

"Except this time . . . scares me because I know I can't skate out there after eight months and expect to have everything the way it was," he said.

"I know the press and some fans are going to give me a rough time, but I want to concentrate on my play and help the Rangers. People were hanging signs about me long before this incident. If people didn't recognize my ability, they would waste their time writing signs about me.

"I have gotten a lot of abuse and I realize I brought it on myself, but it really hurts when they say ignorant things about my family."

Two of his biggest boosters, he says, are his father and brother, Bob, the latter with the NHL's St. Louis Blues, who phone him each week to bolster his morale and Niagara Falls coach Bert Templeton "has helped me with a few little talks."

"But the person who has helped me most is Frank Milne. He pushes me, yet when I'm down (on myself) he picks me up."

He said he bears no grudge against Ziegler for the long and lonely hours he has spent keeping himself in shape for the time when he can return to the league.

"I've been very quiet since I was suspended," the 5-foot-11, 180-pounder says. "I don't blame Mr. Ziegler at all. . . .

"When we get to talk with Mr. Ziegler he should let me back. If he doesn't, well . . . I'll just leave that blank. I just hope to God he does."

WTT plans to continue

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — World Team Tennis will field franchises for the coming season in Dallas, Los Angeles and San Diego, commissioner Earl Buchholz announced Thursday.

Earlier this month WTT appeared on the brink of extinction when eight of its 10 franchises folded. After the crash only the Golden Gaters and Phoenix Rackets remained viable.

Women protest cuts in job-counselling funds

OTTAWA (CP)—Holly MacKay came here from a small community with few job skills, little confidence in herself, no friends and no idea of where to look for work in a strange city.

She went to a Canada Manpower Centre where a job interviewer told her if she didn't have a clear idea of the job descritiption she'd fit into, her name couldn't be processed through a computer.

"It sounds to me like you need counselling, he told me, in a voice insinuating that I really was stupid," she recalls. Well, she got counselling, but not from the government manpower centre.

She went to the Women's Career Counselling Service, and with a group of similar women spent a month gaining confidence, learning how to write job resumes, how to present herself to an employer and how to search for work.

Miss MacKay, now a job counsellor herself, told the story in an interview outside a Commons manpower committee room where Bob Rae (NDP—Broadview) argued against government plans to cut women as a target group in the Outreach program.

The Outreach program provides financing for agencies (Such as Women's Career Counselling Service aimed at helping disadvantaged groups find work) they are unable to get through regular services such as the manpower centres.

To bolster his protest, Rae brought with him Miss MacKay and seven other women from similar agencies—Times Change in Toronto and Women Power in London, Ont.

Rae said at a time of high unemployment the groups should not have government support cut off. Employment Minister Bud Cullen announced last month that about $3 million of the $9 million Outreach budget had to be cut.

Women and youth would no longer qualify as disadvantaged groups on grounds of their sex and age, respectively. But women and youth with other problems such as a handicap, alcoholism or a prison record would still get service, he said.

Frank Maine (L—Wellington), Cullen's parliamentary assistant, told Rae the budget cut was ordered by the treasury board in the government's $2.5 billion cost-cutting exercise a few months ago.

"We had to move and move quickly and decisions were made. That was the decision that was made and we're sticking by it."

However, Cullen's deputy minister Jack Manion said the agencies that will lose government funds are not yet known and that all the agencies will be carefully evaluated before funds are cut.

He suggested the cuts may be less than $3 million in the end, if the government finds the services are badly needed and that the agencies are not wasting money.

Manion also said that if women are not getting good service from Canada Manpower Centres "then women should raise hell about it."

"They are. . . . They're here," Rae shot back.

Manion cited several other efforts by the government to help women combat a traditional disadvantage in the work force, such as reserving job training openings for women only.

Liberal MP Art Lee (Vancouver East) indicated he is unhappy with the budget cut, too, saying programs for disadvantaged groups should not be subject to cyclical financial adjustments by government.

Forest fire loss down

OTTAWA (CP) — Forest fires this year destroyed 250,000 hectares, down considerably from last year's total and the 10-year average, says the Canadian Forestry Service in its final report for 1978.

Czarist photos sold for $6,000

NEW YORK (UPI)—An album of photos of the family of Czar Nicholas II, believed to have been pasted up by the legendary Grand Duchess Anastasia as a child, was auctioned here this week for $6,000 in a lot of four photo albums connected with the imperial Russian court.

The historic album of pictures taken at various palaces and on the Romanov yacht between 1907 and 1909 was consigned to the Sotheby-Parke Bernet auction galleries by a Pennsylvania coin dealer. It was purchased by La Vielle Russie, a Fifth Avenue dealer in Russian art, in spirited bidding against a southern private collector.

Prince Nikita and Prince Alexander Romanov, great nephews of Czar Nicholas, inspected the album before the sale and noted that all the imperial children were handy with box cameras, and Anastasia was particularly enthusiatic about photography.

The pre-sale estimate on the value of the albums was $3,000.

French develop novel annuity plan for aged

By DON COOK

Colonist Los Angeles Times Service

PARIS — If you are French, own a house and are getting on in years, with nobody in particular to inherit your property, there is a unique way to parlay your home into a kind of do-it-yourself old-age pension plan.

It is called viager. Classified advertisements appear all the time in newspapers and magazines all over the country such as this one from a recent issue of Le Figaro "Sixty kilometres from Paris, viager, farmhouse, central heating, bathroom, covered interior court, house 500 square metres, property 6,000 square metres, two persons age 69 and 72."

The house is not exactly up for sale. But the old people who own it are looking for somebody who will provide them with a guaranteed monthly income for the rest of their lives — in return for which the provider would take possession of their property and become its sole owner when they both die.

A would-be owner might wind up in possession of a valuable property after paying out viager money to the occupants for only a few months. Or he might go on paying for years.

Old customs die hard — despite the steadily increasing level and widening scope of state old-age assistance benefits in France. National expenditure on new facilities alone for the "troisieme (third) age," as senior citizens are called in France now, runs around $45 million annually. The facilities and services include old peoples' clubs, restaurants, home-delivery meal services, special sports facilities, building repairs, telephone priorities, and even barber, pedicure and facial services.

But about 400,000 old people in the country also are still receiving viager income not only on their houses or small farms but also on apartments and even houseboats.

Viager in simple English is an annuity, and the custom has been practiced in France for decades and exists also to a lesser extent in Belgium and Italy. It is arranged in a strictly legal manner by lawyers who specialize in property matters, with the system not only enshrined in law but also included in French income tax regulations.

According to the Ministry of Finance, despite the inflationary value of property in France and the higher and higher asking price for viager arrangements, it remains a popular practice.

Viager sales involve a complex and very French negotiation in which the value of the property, the age and the health of the owner or owners and the resources of the would-be buyer all come into play. Not surprisingly, it has been the subject of several French films — some of them genuinely funny. In one, the buyer winds up with a nervous breakdown while the seller comes back rejuvenated from a deathbed and lives on and on. Others have had not-so-funny black comedy murder plots.

A lawyer who has handled many viager arrangements said, "We use actuarial tables as a guide in determining fair arrangements. The younger the seller of the house, the smaller, generally, are the down payment (bouquet in French) and the monthly payment. The best viager deal is a small down payment and a big monthly payment. If it lasts a long time, then the seller wins. If it goes the opposite way, the buyer wins."

Of course there is nothing to prevent old people who embark on viager arrangements from taking full advantage of French state benefits as well. Since President Valery Giscard d'Estaing was elected president in 1974 and installed the popular Simone Veil as minister of health and family affairs, there has been a steady push to increase and enlarge state services for the aged.

With subsidy money, administrative instructions and prodding from Paris, special programs for old people are on the increase all over the country, sometimes most effectively in small towns and villages where even the clannish and private French usually know each other better than in the cities.

At Letang la Ville, a town of 4,500 on the outskirts of Paris, the town administration has instituted a regular Thursday luncheon get-together for the elderly and a Tuesday afternoon tea party at the town community centre.

"We usually have 10 to 14 people at the luncheons. And if someone would like the lunch but is not able to come into the town, then we make arrangements for it to be delivered and served hot at their residence," Yvonne Henot, who looks after community activities, said.

The menu one recent Thursday was typical — tomato salad to start, then roast beef and green beans followed by cheese, caramel custard and coffee. Red wine was on the table for those who wanted it.

"We charge nine francs (about $2.25) to those who can afford to pay that much, and the meals cost the municipality about 15 francs," Mrs. Henot said. "The catering is done by the same people who prepare the school meals.

"It is a simple program which gives the older people something to do, something to look forward to and a reason to go out and see people. They have to telephone my office at the mairie (town hall) on Wednesday, to say whether they will be coming or whether they would like a meal sent to their homes. And — oh yes — they are asked to bring their own napkins."

Letang la Ville also offers free barber service for men one morning every two months at the mairie. A pedicure service is offered once a month, a weekly physical culture hour for those holding certificates of medical fitness, beauty treatments subsidized by the town by special appointment at the local beauty salon, house-cleaning help and a club vacation program with local retired people going to Romania for two weeks next June.

There are now 6,000 restaurant programs for old people in France, ranging from the weekly subsidized meal offered in small towns to full scale restaurants serving everyday in the bigger population centres. Another 10,000 clubs for old people have been organized and furnished throughout the country with regular meeting places. About 2 million people regularly use them.

There are just more than 7 million men and women in France above the age of 65 — 13.5 percent of the population. It is difficult to generalize about pension or retirement rates, because the 400 different pension funds operated by unions or professional associations pay widely varying benefits on top of social security benefits, which also vary on the basis of past contributions.

Boy's death ruled accident

A coroner's jury of five men and one woman ruled Wednesday night in Victoria that the death of a five-year-old boy following a traffic accident Nov. 8 was accidental.

In the inquest in the death of Jason Poole, 1176 Tolmie, the jury made the finding but declined to make any recommendations to coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre.

He died of head injuries four days later in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

B.C. firefighters praise new training academy

Attorney-General Garde Gardom presented $500,000 Wednesday to the B.C. Justice Institute for its new fire-training academy at Jericho Beach near Vancouver.

Gardom said the money, from provincial lottery profits, would be used to buy fire-fighting and training equipment for the academy, which will eventually train all B.C. firemen.

At present, individual municipal fire departments handle their own training, leading to duplication of facilities and uneven standards.

Terry Erskine, president of the B.C. local of the International Firefighters' Association, Wednesday night welcomed the announcement as a step in the direction of bringing uniform training standards to B.C. firefighting.

He said the association, along with the B.C. Association of Fire Chiefs, had been pressing for such an academy for some time.

Eventually, all firefighters in B.C. will go through the academy, even those who have been on forces for most of their lives and are nearing retirement age.

Erskine said the union was eager to get started on the training program, but it wanted to ensure that minimum manning standards were set at individual fire halls while training was in progress.

"There should also be special training programs for older firemen who have not had the same educational opportunities as newer recruits," he said.

Al LeQuesne, chief of the Langford Volunteer Fire Department, called the grant a "step in the right direction" although he did not expect it would have much immediate impact on established volunteer departments.

"Eventually, the aim is to set up a mobile training school which will go to volunteer departments, but there's no way our members can afford to take off a month's work without pay to go to the academy," he said.

He said he expected the academy might play a key role in training newly established volunteer units in growing areas of B.C.

All volunteer departments already use professional training materials in regular sessions, supplemented occasionally by a mobile unit from the B.C. fire marshal's office.

Car chase decisions up to police—mayor

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier says he has no intention of jumping on the bandwagon of Lower Mainland aldermen who want high-speed police chases restricted following a fatal crash in Delta last week.

Couvelier, chairman of Saanich's police board, said Thursday he was reluctant to interfere with existing procedures of the municipal force "until the need arises."

He said he had faith in the local force, that it would follow rules and act with caution when pursuing a driver at high speed.

Both acting Delta Mayor Donald Porter and Burnaby Ald. David Mercier have asked their municipal staffs to determine what limits police place on such pursuits. And they want police to avoid chasing minor offenders.

Saanich police Inspector Ted Owen said the department had no set policy. "It's a judgment call of the officer. If he feels it's getting too dangerous, then he backs off."

It was left to the officer's discretion whether to continue chasing a car at high speed, he said.

The aldermen's actions follow the death of Michael Varelis of Delta, who was hit by a Surrey detachment RCMP cruiser that was chasing a drag-racer. The police officer was not seriously injured.

Noted doctor dies at 83

BALTIMORE (AP) — Dr. Frank Walsh, a professor emeritus of Johns Hopkins Medical School who became known as the father of neuro-ophthalmology, has died at 83. Walsh, a retired professor of ophthalmology, died of cancer.

Lot size hearing planned

The contentious issue of increasing the subdivision minimum from five to 10 acres in much of Saanich lying outside the urban containment boundary will be the subject of a public hearing next month.

Affected by the proposal would be all lands already within the Agricultural Land Reserve or designated as conservation areas, but some upland areas would remain under the existing five-acre minimum for subdivision purposes.

The proposal is a modified version of an earlier planning department recommendation that all rural areas lying outside the urban containmemnt boundary be covered by the 10-acre subdivisiion restrictions.

Nature rated tops

City dwellers in B.C. find contact with nature one of their favorite leisure time pursuits, a joint federal-provincial report shows.

The report also warns that recreational planners should guard against the loss of areas and activities which meet urban dwellers' needs.

The study says that Vancouver and Victoria residents prefer hiking or beachcombing to swimming in public pools; gardening to playing on racquet ball courts and camping to watching television.

Urban residents use leisure activities mainly to rid themselves of tensions and frustrations, the report said.

City residents, it added, see nature as highly important in the province's future planning of recreation and would strongly resist seeing opportunities for contact with it diminished.

Non-feminist in cabinet

ROME (AP) — Premier Giulio Andreotti has appointed Ines Boffardi, a militant Roman Catholic woman who campaigned against divorce and abortion, as cabinet undersecretary for women's matters. A 59-year-old labor expert, Miss Boffardi is unmarried. It is the first time a cabinet member has been named in that field.

McCarthy scoffs at lottery charge

Canadian Press

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy said Wednesday that the latest opposition charges concerning the government's handling of lottery profits were nonsense, ludicrous and "sheer political fluff from Mrs. Dailly."

Eileen Dailly (NDP—Burnaby-North) said Tuesday that a partial list of recipients of grants from the profits showed most of the grants went to ridings represented by Social Credit MLAs.

She said 32 grants worth $1.5 million went to Social Credit ridings while NDP constituencies received only two grants valued at $100,000.

Mrs. Dailly said the figures proved the Social Credit government was using the grants for political patronage.

"We don't ask people what their constituency is and what their political leanings are when they call for lottery funds," said Mrs. McCarthy. "We look at the project and the worthiness of the project."

She said that of the $1.5 million in grants mentioned by Mrs. Dailly, close to $1 million went toward construction of a therapeutic pool in Vancouver that would serve the whole Greater Vancouver area.

The minister said there might be more grants to Social Credit ridings because the people elected more Social Credit MLAs in the last election.

Doukhobors warn of new terror reign

VANCOUVER (CP)—A new, younger generation of terrorists could revive the bombings and mass arson that struck Castlegar and other communities in southeastern British Columbia two decades ago, a spokesman for the Doukhobor sect said Thursday.

Despite numerous warnings and pleas from the Doukhobor community, the provincial government is ignoring the problem, hoping it will pass with the death of members of the Sons of Freedom religious sect, according to George Koochin.

IN A RENEWED bid to get provincial government attention for the problem, the Union of Spiritual Communities of Christ has appealed to the Central Kootenay Regional District to pressure the attorney-general's ministry for action.

Koochin, an executive member of the union, which represents about 8,000 members in B.C., said the strife between the two groups was growing worse rather than diminishing.

Guards were posted around the clock at the homes of members whose lives and properties had been threatened, he said.

SINCE 1975, when the Brilliant community hall near here was destroyed in an arson fire, the union has kept a 24-hour-a-day watch on a new hall to protect it from a repeat attack.

Volunteers stand over the grave of a Doukhobor woman whose home was set afire following her death in September, to ensure it is not bombed, according to another union member.

Despite threats on people's lives, arson damage estimated at between $2.5 and $3 million in the last eight years, and ominous signs of even greater violence, the government had done little to solve the problem, Koochin said.

"FOR THE last three years, we have requested about every three weeks an audience with Garde Gardom (provincial attorney-general), but every time, we have been refused," he said.

He said the union had spoken to a ministry civil servant, but promises of action, including a special committee to study the problem, had been broken.

"They (the government) think the problem will dissolve by attrition," he said. "That is very much of an illusion."

KOOCHIN SAID the Sons of Freedom, a splinter group numbering about 2,000, had passed through several phases in its protest.

Essentially a group of purists who see the union as leading the flock astray, they first protested around the turn of the century by setting examples, such as carrying the vegetarian credo of the sect to extremes by refusing to wear leather shoes.

Then came a period of persuasion in which they attempted to win union members to the Sons of Freedom cause. The emerging group was the most radical, however, he said.

"WHAT REALLY scares us is that this younger generation has no illusions about ideals . . . they just practise terrorism."

The new breed of violence was demonstrated in a recent incident in Brilliant, a predominantly Doukhobor community.

A GANG OF youths in their 20s dragged a caretaker out of a home before setting it ablaze, he said.

Koochin said they picked the home because it belonged to Anna Petrova Markova, an active union member and the daughter of a Doukobour founder.

The RCMP supplied the union with the names of 12 members whose lives and homes were on a list of future victims, he said. The union had also received direct threats.

UNCHECKED, he said, the terrorists could initiate a new wave of destruction reminiscent of the 1950s and 1960s, when a West Kootenay Power and Light Co. power line was bombed and numerous homes destroyed.

RCMP were frustrated by the apparent inability of the courts to deal with the ongoing problem, he said. While numerous arrests had been made, almost all defendants had been freed by the courts.

Koochin said the appeal to the regional district was a desperate attempt to pressure the provincial government into action.

THE DISTRICT has sent a letter asking the attorney-general "to take immediate action to eliminate acts of terrorism and arson against taxpayers in the Kootenays."

He said the union hoped the provincial government would establish some kind of committee to study the problem, to understand what motivated the Sons of Freedom and to bring an end to the terror-filled situation.

McCarthy welcomes refugees

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy extended an official welcome to the refugees from Vietnam on Thursday.

"After decades of hardship and violence, I am sure they will find a peaceful happy home among us," she said. "I am confident that all British Columbians will welcome the refugees and give them every assistance in helping them get settled as quickly as possible."

About 20 refugees have arrived in B.C. out of the 600 expected to settle in Canada. None has yet come to Vancouver Island.

Sovereignty 'key element' in Ottawa view, says Blais'

OTTAWA (CP)—Solicitor-General Jean-Jacques Blais, who had trouble with the phrase earlier this year, defined "national security" Thursday night.

"In their Canadian application," he told the Richelieu Club of Ottawa, "these words simply signify to me those interests of our national life whose integrity from unacceptable interference and influence—overt or clandestine—must be guaranteed, if Canada is to continue to exist as a sovereign, independent nation.

"The phrase 'national security' means no more, but no less than that: Sovereignty is the key element in our nationhood, without which Canada—as we know it and want it to be—could not and would not exist."

When a member of Parliament last winter asked Blais what national security meant, the minister had to admit he couldn't put it into words.

But Thursday night, he delivered a 3,000-word speech on the subject, saying Canadians had to be aware of how the government saw national security and whether or not it had a grip on the subject.

He related national security to five national interests: international relations; national defence; internal security "free from foreign or domestic espionage, terrorism or subversion;" continuation of the process of parliamentary and cabinet government; and federal-provincial relations.

"Because these national interests, in a most fundamental way, affect the lives of every Canadian, information about them under the control of the federal government, unauthorized access or disclosure of which could carry unacceptable consequences for Canada, ought to be protected."

Such information should be available only to Canadians "whose loyalty and reliability are certain, and even then, only as authorized and necessary."

Government was reviewing administrative measures to protect national security information and the measures would be brought up to date in the near future.

Blais is responsible to Parliament for the RCMP Security Service, which he said maintained the internal security of Canada.

Security Service operations produced intelligence that gave government "a form of insurance against threats and potential threats to Canada emanating from external and internal sources."

The Security Service looked for facts "to arrive as near as possible at the truth regarding individuals, groups and organizations whose activities present a direct threat to Canada."

"Subversive activity" was defined in the Official Secrets Act as espionage or sabotage; foreign intelligence activities; activities aimed at accomplishing governmental change within Canada or elsewhere "by force or violence or any criminal means;" activities by a foreign power aimed at actual or potential attack of Canada; and activities of a foreign terrorist group directed to terrorist acts against Canada.

He said the need for secrecy made it difficult for government to tell Canadians what they were being protected against.

But Blais said he felt the Leader of the Official Opposition, currently Joe Clark, should be advised privately and regularly "of the situation facing the nation" when internal security was involved.

Such briefings, he hoped, would help clear away "much of the apparent misunderstanding and sometimes suspicion and distrust occasionally evidenced in Parliament on this subject.

"Very little, if anything at all, is gained by airing sensitive national internal security matters in public. They must be discussed privately."

Blais said protecting national security posed less of a threat to the country today than at any time in the past.

"The real danger is that we will be unable to conduct necessary operations because of the risk that they may be disclosed (to the news media)."

He said security services in other countries would lose confidence in Canada's ability to keep anything secret if they kept finding operational activities on the front page of newspapers.

Blais said informants might be reluctant to sell data to the security service if they thought their names would become public.

"If secrets cannot be kept, our own security officials will begin to question taking the risks which part of their work if their sources are to be exposed in the media."

The solution might be fewer secrets and more control of them. Moreover, the media might acknowledge that some things should be kept secret by government, he said.

U.S. trims arms deals

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has imposed an $8.431 billion ceiling on foreign arms sales in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1. The ceiling announced Wednesday compares with a fiscal 1978 lid of $8.551 billion. Carter said in a statement the $117-million cut in actual dollars translated to an effective cut of eight per cent when adjusted for inflation. Arms shipments to NATO, Japan, Australia and New Zealand are not affected by the ceilings.

Acquittal on birth control push

'was like winning the Grey Cup'

Nurse shatters 40-year silence

By JUDY CREIGHTON
CP Family Editor

TORONTO (CP) — When 28-year-old Dorothea Palmer Ferguson was on trial in 1937 for dispensing birth control information and devices to women in a small village outside Ottawa, she instructed her lawyer to say she was ready to go to jail if her work was not considered philanthropic.

Mrs. Ferguson, now 70, said Wednesday that after 40 years of silence since her acquittal of the charges on March 17, 1937, she wanted "to tell a few things that didn't get into the newspapers at the time," resulting in her being forced into retirement.

MRS. FERGUSON, an articulate woman from Ottawa, described events that led up to the charges and the subsequent trial which received public denunciation as well as praise.

She said the case probably was the first of its kind in Canada to raise the defence of the public good as an answer to a charge of disseminating information on birth control.

Mrs. Ferguson was charged under Section 207 of the Criminal Code. The section was removed by an act of Parliament in 1968.

-CP
Mrs. Ferguson recalls her 1937 trial

IN THE 1930s and up until the change in the Code, anyone disseminating birth control information or articles to prevent conception was liable to two years' imprisonment.

Mrs. Ferguson, who used her maiden name Dorothea Palmer in her work to protect the reputation of her husband's family, was employed as a nurse-social worker for the Parents' Information Bureau, based in Kitchener, Ont., to visit known low-income homes.

SHE OFFERED needy mothers the chance to apply for certain contraceptive materials which then would be sent to them free, direct from the bureau, if the application was approved on economic and other grounds.

Mrs. Ferguson received information on her prospective clients from doctors, social agencies, relief officers and clergymen.

She would visit these people, give them verbal and a certain amount of elementary information where necessary and when asked take an application for contraceptives.

BUT HER work soon was discovered by certain groups, including the Roman Catholic Church, which disagreed with birth control under any circumstances.

Mrs. Ferguson was arrested on Sept. 14, 1936, as she was leaving the home of a French Roman Catholic family. The family was on relief and there were 10 children.

The mother had telephoned Mrs. Ferguson and asked her to visit her.

DURING THE trial, evidence went into questions of biblical theory, moral sanctions and the dangers of subordination of scientific thought and religious findings.

The defence called as expert witnesses social service workers, economists, sociologist, doctors of medicine, psychiatrists, labor leaders clergymen and moral theologians.

The Crown called 21 women as witnesses, Mrs. Ferguson recalls. All of them were Catholics, all but one were French-Canadian.

"BECAUSE they had refused to act as witnesses against me, most of the women had to be served with subpoenas after their priests told them they would be excommunicated from the Church if they did not."

In a record of the trial, the Crown attorney made a substantial argument that it was not in the public good that a social worker should call upon women who were Catholics and to place them in a position to exercise birth control without giving them a warning that it might be contrary to the teachings of their Church.

IT ALSO suggested that Mrs. Ferguson should have discussed the matter with the husband, or made sure it was discussed with him.

Mrs. Ferguson said that when she tried to talk to husbands, their attitude was "abusive and insulting toward me."

"They thought it was their right even though many had venereal disease to have intercourse with their women any time. Most of them already had large families and nine out of 10 were on relief."

SHE SAID one woman who asked to have her visit had 22 children and was desperate.

"Her last two had been born blind. In that case, the husband was in a home for the insane because he had syphilis. But each time he was released he would impregnate his wife."

Mrs. Ferguson said that during the trial, she was taunted and verbally abused by men and women attending the lengthy proceedings.

"After the trial was over, and I was acquitted, I was beaten up by a husband of one of the women who said he wanted to rape me," she said. "But he got my knee and a punch from my fist instead."

MRS. FERGUSON said her arrest did not come as a surprise because she had been warned by several people in the village they would have the police after her.

The Crown appealed the acquittal, but on June 2, 1937, the appeal was dismissed. Mrs. Ferguson was vindicated and the principle was recognized that her work in promoting the use of contraceptives was legal because it was for the public good.

SO WHY DID she go into virtual hiding for 40 years, only to surface this week?

After the appeal was dismissed, she said she "had had enough."

"My husband was very much against me continuing the work and we had quite a few battles about it. I was still in fear for myself after the many threats and the attempted rape.

"We had to sell our library business and moved away from Ottawa for a few years. Luckily no one knew my married name as I had worked as a social worker and was charged under my maiden name."

Mrs. Ferguson said with a laugh that by coming out of hiding, "I am showing that I am finally of the age of discretion.

"Or maybe it's my Welsh pig-headedness."

Of the general reaction to her acquittal, Mrs. Ferguson recalls that for those on the defence side and the reluctant women witnesses for the Crown, "it was like winning the Grey Cup."

Traffic snarls tackled

Traffic loops are being installed so all lights along the four-block stretch from Douglas to Vernon will be activated by the volume of traffic.

The changes are the result of a recent meeting between ministry officials and Saanich staff.

A concrete median will be built to prevent vehicles from darting across Saanich Road between McDonald's restaurant and the Town and Country shopping centre.

Traffic congestion problems arose because of four unsynchronized lights at Douglas, Oak, Seymour and Vernon, installed as part of the Blanshard Street extension.

Now the four lights will be synchronized.

Dessert that's tops in tradition

Cake gives sweet tooth a treat

By ALISON DA ROSA
Colonist—Copley News Service

Cake is an integral ingredient in North American life.

It's as traditional as a church picnic; as today as dessert defrosting for unexpected company.

Cake — especially when it's made from scratch — contains milk, eggs, fruits and enriched ingredients that are good for most people.

So why not get the family together and prepare yourselves a special treat? Let a cake turn tonight into an occasion.

POPPY SEED CHEESECAKE

½ cup graham cracker crumbs
1 tsp. ground cinnamon
1¼ cups sugar, divided
3 tbsps. flour
3 tbsps. poppy seed
2 8-oz. packages cream cheese, softened
1 cup sour cream
1½ tsps. vanilla
6 eggs, separated
⅛ tsp. salt
½ tsp. cream of tartar
Whipped cream (optional)

Preheat oven to 275 degrees. Mix crumbs with cinnamon. Coat sides of a 9-inch, well-buttered springform pan with crumbs and press into the bottom; set aside.

In the large bowl of an electric mixer, combine ¾ cup of the sugar with flour and poppy seeds. Add cream cheese, sour cream and vanilla, beating until mixture is smooth.

In a small bowl, beat egg yolks until light and lemon colored; blend into cheese mixture. Add salt to egg whites; beat until foamy. Add cream of tartar; beat until soft peaks form. Gradually beat in remaining sugar; beat until stiff but not dry.

Fold into cheese mixture. Turn into prepared pan and bake until cake is firm in the center, about 1 hour and 30 minutes. Turn off oven. Open door about six inches at the top, propping it open with a cake pan. Allow cake to remain in the oven until cool, about two hours.

SPICED PUMPKIN LAYER CAKE

16 oz. can pureed pumpkin
½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar
¼ cup water
3 eggs
1 pkg. (1-lb., 2½-ozs.) yellow cake mix
4 tsps. grated orange peel
2 tsps. pumpkin pie spice
1 cup chopped walnuts
Nutmeg Cream Cheese Frosting (see below)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease and flour two 9-inch round cake pans; set aside. In a large bowl, mix pumpkin, brown sugar, water and eggs. Add cake mix, peel and pie spice. Mix at low speed until blended; then at medium speed for five minutes.

Stir in walnuts. Pour into prepared pans. Bake until a cake tester inserted into the center of the cake comes out clean, 30 to 35 minutes. Let cool in pans for 10 minutes. Turn onto wire rack to cool.

Spread on layer with half the frosting. Top with second layer; spread with remaining frosting. Garnish with chopped walnuts, if desired.

NUTMEG CREAM CHEESE FROSTING

3 ozs. package cream cheese, softened
One-third cup butter, softened
4 cups confectioners' sugar
½ tsp. ground nutmeg
1 tsp. vanilla
1½ to 2 tbsps. milk or water

In medium bowl, beat cream cheese and butter until well blended. Gradually add confectioners' sugar, mixing until well combined. Stir in nutmeg and vanilla. Gradually add milk, beating at medium speed after each addition until frosting is of spreading consistency.

CINNAMON MARBLE POUND CAKE

1½ cups sugar
3 eggs
1½ tsps. vanilla
1½ cups unsifted, all-purpose flour
⅛ tsp. baking soda
½ cup sour cream
2 1-oz. squares unsweetened chocolate, melted and cooled
½ tsp. cinnamon

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Grease and flour a 9-by-5-by-3-inch loaf pan; set aside.

In a large bowl, cream butter; beat in sugar until fluffy. Mix in eggs and vanilla. In a medium bowl, mix flour and soda. Add half to the butter mixture; mix well.

Mix in half the sour cream. Repeat steps with remaining flour and sour cream. Remove 1½ cups of the batter to a small bowl; mix in cooled chocolate. To remaining batter, add cinnamon; mix well. Spoon half of the cinnamon batter into the prepared loaf pan. Spoon half of the chocolate batter on top. Repeat with remaining batters.

Swirl with a knife, using an up and down motion. Bake until a cake tester inserted into the center of the cake come out clean, about 1½ hours. Let cool in pan 10 minutes. Turn out onto wire rack to cool.

CHOCOLATE GLAZE

1 oz. square unsweetened chocolate
1½ tbsps. butter
½ cup confectioners' sugar
⅛ tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. vanilla
About 5 tsps. hot water

In small saucepan, melt chocolate and butter over low heat. Remove from heat; stir in sugar, cinnamon and vanilla. Mix in water, a teaspoon at a time, until glaze is thin enough to pour easily. Drizzle over cooled pound cake.

Russia hit by quake

MOSCOW (AP) — An earthquake measuring seven on the Soviet 12-point Medvedev scale shook the northern slopes of the Transalai mountains on the Soviet-Chinese border Thursday.

Cancer fighter developed

CHICAGO (UPI) — An ultrasound hand-held scanner has been developed that can spot breast tumors as small as a millimeter in width and detect stroke-causing plugs in neck arteries.

The "Bio-Sound" scanner uses the principles of sonar and bounces sound waves off parts of the body, recording the echoes as pictures displayed on a screen, said a spokesman for Bio-Dynamics, the manufacturer.

Breast lesions previously could only be seen when they were two millimeters or larger.

The device can tell whether lumps that can be felt are solid or fluid-filled cysts, possibly eliminating the need for a biopsy, the manufacturer said.

ann landers

Dear Ann Landers: I am 29 years old, the mother of two small children. Something happened last night and I need to know whether or not I am crazy to get upset over it. Actually I got more than upset, I was furious.

This is what happened. About 10:30 at night a friend of my husband's came tearing across our front lawn on his motorcycle. We both went out to see what the racket was all about. It sounded like a truck was about to crash into the side of our house.

When my husband saw it was his buddy he asked what was wrong. The nut bellowed, "I have to go so bad I think I'm about to bust a kidney."

I immediately invited him into the house to use the bathroom. Instead of coming in he unzipped his jeans and urinated right under the kitchen window. I couldn't believe my eyes. My husband didn't say one word to him. I lost my temper and yelled, "You've got your nerve! We have a sprinkler system for when we want the lawn watered. If a neighbor saw you do that I'd die of shame!"

The slob muttered something about "That's friends for you . . ." and left. My husband then proceeded to chew ME out for being snotty! According to him I hurt the guy's feelings and he wants me to apologize. Was I wrong? I need you on my side. — Still Boiling.

Dear S.B.: You have me — all the way. The clod probably had 14 beers and was drunk. He's the one who should apologize.

Dear Ann Landers: I read the letter from the woman who had the miscarriage and was disgusted with her friends and relatives because they said dumb things like, "You're lucky. A miscarriage means the baby wasn't normal." Or — "It's better to have a miss than to carry for nine months and then give birth to a dead infant."

She said the nurses and doctors knew the right things to say and were a great comfort to her.

You thanked her for writing and added, "You've helped to educate a lot of people today." Well, she didn't educate me — or anyone else. Please tell us, what is the right thing to say to a woman who has a miscarriage? What did the nurses and doctors say?—Still Ignorant.

Dear Still: The doctors and nurses probably said, "We know this is a big disappointment but it's not uncommon. We'll see you back here soon and next time you'll be going home with a baby."

Visitors should say very little. Two words are enough: "I'm sorry" — and then the subject should be changed to something cheerful.

Dear Ann Landers: I am sick and tired of getting ripped off. In the past year two well-known magazines have stopped coming after six months although we paid for a year's subscription for one and three years for the other.

Writing to complain does no good. I'm fighting with a computer and it's driving me bananas.

My sister moved and notified three publishing companies well in advance of her change of address. So far she has not received a single magazine. What can we do?—Fed To Teeth.

Dear Fed: Write to Magazine Action Line, Publisher's Clearing House, 382 Channel Drive, Port Washington, N.Y. 11050. The service is free and speedy.

Dimes plug tot's study

NEW YORK (AP) — A new research program by the National Foundation-March of Dimes is trying to determine to what extent premature birth and low birthweight may impair mental development.

The March of Dimes has awarded $247,000 in grants to research scientists throughout the United States for the program.

"A major thrust of the new program," says Dr. Samuel Ajl, vice-president for research, "is to develop better means to assess and predict mental performance, and evaluate the success of attempts to improve it in children at special risk.

"Eventually, if the findings point to low birthweight as an important factor in learning disabilities or general intelligence, we may see wider interest in attacking the birthweight problem directly."

The March of Dimes says 80,000 babies a year are born in the United States with markedly low birthweights, defined as four pounds, six ounces or less.

Your Good Health

Dear Dr. Ruble: I am 53 years old, five feet tall, and weigh 155. I'm now on a 1,000-calorie diet. I don't think I'm doing very good on it. In four weeks, I've only lost six pounds. I hardly ever eat bread and stay away from sweets, etc. What am I doing wrong? I'm getting so discouraged. — Mrs. L.M.

I fail to see your problem. Many would be thrilled at such a good weight loss. It is better than a pound a week. It's sensibly moderate, and if you continue, it will produce the desired results.

Note: If you are discouraged now, wait until the well-known "plateau" is reached. This comes after satisfactory weight loss over a period of time. You'll probably find you will not lose appreciably for a while no matter how you eat. All it means is that most of the exess liquid weight in your system has departed and the time has arrived for the serious business of shedding the more stubborn kind (fat). But lose you will. So keep up the good work.

Note for Mrs. E.R. — You should have your breast examined promptly. A sudden recession of a formerly normal nipple can be a cancer warning.

Dear Dr. Ruble: Explain the difference between a simple and compound fracture please. — J.M.

A simple fracture is also called a "closed" fracture. It means the bone is damaged but the skin is not punctured. In a compound fracture a fragment of bone has pierced the skin.

Chamber fights paralysis

Dr. John Yeo looks over decompression chamber equipment being used at Sydney, Australia's Royal North Shore Hospital for treating quadriplegics and paraplegics. Day care studied

TORONTO (CP) — The editor of a textbook on day care says day-care facilities have not kept up with demand.

Kathleen Gallagher Ross said fewer than 20 per cent of pre-school children in day care are in licensed centres which are subject to government regulation.

The book, called Good Day Care—Fighting for it, Getting it, Keeping it, is the first textbook about the subject to be published in Canada, Mrs. Ross said.

Buyers confuse rights with goodwill gesture

TORONTO (CP) — Refunds and exchanges on store purchases are a "public relations gesture, not a consumer's right," says Paul Tuz of the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Toronto.

Tuz said retailers are under no legal obligation at Christmas or any other time to take back goods unless they are defective or clearly do not live up to sales claims.

"Consumers have been spoiled by the vast number of ethical business establishments (who will refund and exchange) and, as a result they are susceptible to those that are unethical," Tuz said in an interview this week.

"Ethical establishments are so much in the majority, that many people are under the impression that certain practices are law and inherent rights of the consumer.

"The prime example is this business of being able to return things within 48 hours. In law that has never existed."

The Ontario ministry of consumer and commercial affairs said in a pre-Christmas information bulletin that while retailers are not required to give refunds or exchanges, most responsible merchants realize that offering fair refunds and exchanges will help them keep customers.

Some stores offer a credit note, others offer a cash refund or exchange, while still others offer a refund or exchange only for a limited time, often 10 days after purchase.

Then there are stores that will not refund your money or exchange goods after purchase for any reason because their policy is that all sales are final.

Tuz said to avoid disappointment especially at Christmas time, check the store's policy before you buy.

Insist that the policy be written on your receipt, he said, and find out what is required to prove where you bought the goods.

Also ask in what condition the merchandise will be accepted for a refund—unopened, opened but not used, slightly used or damaged from use.

Consumers talking turkey on high prices

By JUDY CREIGHTON
CP Family Editor

Canadian consumers may have reason to talk turkey now with prices for their Christmas bird up in all cities surveyed by The Canadian Press.

Ken Crawford, chairman of the Canadian Turkey Marketing Agency, said last week that turkey wholesalers are using foul play, hoarding birds to push up the prices of Christmas turkeys.

And Frank Drea, Ontario minister of consumer and commercial relations, has urged consumers to boycott turkeys as long as they are selling at higher prices than in previous holiday seasons.

To add fuel to the controversy, two federal cabinet ministers are at odds on the reasons turkey is now more expensive.

Warren Allmand, federal minister of consumer affairs, said Tuesday in the Commons that there is a shortage of turkey. Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan, however, claims there is plenty.

For the Cross-Canada Survey conducted Tuesday, turkeys checked were Grade A standard brand, weighing under 20 pounds, frozen and not self-basting.

The average price of turkey across Canada at this time last year was 98 cents a pound.

In Halifax, Dominion Stores had Grade A turkey priced at $1.59 a pound. Turkey prices in Saint John, N. B., ranged from $1.39 to $1.45 a pound.

At a Montreal supermarket, turkeys were $1.29 a pound. They were $1.28 a pound at Loblaws in Toronto and Maple Leaf brand was $1.39 in Ottawa.

In Regina and Winnipeg, the price for turkey was $1.35 a pound.

Super-Valu Stores in Vancouver had birds priced at $1.39 a pound for turkeys weighing up to 20 pounds. Canada Safeway in the same city quoted $1.33 a pound.

Federal government statistics show wholesalers buy turkeys from farmers for about 52 cents a pound and sell them to retailers for $1.05 to $1.07 a pound.

Finger put on Norman for raisin price hike

TORONTO (CP) — Such Christmas baking ingredients as raisins and nuts are up in price this year and cooks can blame shortages and Hurricane Norman, which struck California in September, for the increase.

Prices for raisins have more than doubled from 1977 because the hurricane struck and wiped out almost all of the crop in the San Joaquim Valley while the crop was outside drying on the ground, an industry spokesman said.

Walter Morgan, executive vice-president of C. B. Powell Ltd., a large food brokerage firm which markets Sun Maid raisins, said that "there are raisins available for the Christmas season but they're much more expensive."

A spokesman for another firm said California usually produces 210,000 tons of raisins a year but will be lucky if there are 35,000 tons this year.

Baking nuts, particularly walnuts and almonds, have gone up 33 to 50 per cent from last year.

Jim Boehmer, president of McNair Products Co. Ltd., which sells McNair packaged baking nuts, said his company's price on a four-ounce package of walnut pieces rose to 99 cents this year from 69 cents last year and that the increase is hurting sales.

Whole plain almonds from California have increased this year to a retail price of $1.99 for a 200-gram package from $1.29 last year.

Blanched almonds in the same size went to $2.29 from $1.49. Pecans from Georgia and South Carolina increased to $1.39 for 100 grams from 95 cents.

The biggest seller, walnuts which come from China, India, the Phillipines and California, rose about 50 per cent from last year, mainly due to increased demand and poor supply.

Boehmer said large industrial users of nuts and raisins and foreign buyers like the Japanese, who have a favorable exchange rate against the U.S. dollar, are buying up supplies which further reduces amounts to consumers and the neighborhood bakery. Bad weather also has affected nut crops in California.

And Morgan said the raisin supply situation will worsen.

"What buyers have now is all they're going to get," he said.

"By February or March, the supply will be minimal. Prices won't be normal again until this time next year."

Curbs put on food tags

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Some foods would have to stop being advertised as "natural" and other products touted as low-fat health aids would have to also preach good nutrition under a new Federal Trade Commission staff proposal.

In addition, no food would be allowed to advertise itself as a "health food" — although stores and shops could still use that phrase — because the term is too arbitrary to be meaningful, the staff report said.

"There is widespread public confusion about some of the words used to promote foods on the basis of nutrition and health benefits," said Albert Kramer, head of the FTC's Bureau of Consumer Protection.

"Terms of art have worked their way into everyday parlance through advertising, but have acquired different meanings," he said.

The proposed rules are the result of four years of FTC hearings and studies on how to get more nutrition information into the $1.3 billion worth of food advertising printed and aired every year.

The latest proposals are significantly different from previous versions in two areas — they will allow advertising, with restrictions, for natural and organic foods, whereas the original proposal would have banned such ads; and they will permit limited discussion of the heart disease, cholesterol and fat question, whereas no mention of that controversy would have been allowed under the 1974 proposal.

Space firm hired former FBI agent

OTTAWA (CP)—Warren Hart, a former FBI agent who says he once spied on black militant groups in Canada for the RCMP, now works on the Caribbean island of Antigua for Space Research Corp., a company suspected of shipping arms to South Africa, company officials say.

Space Research lawyer Don Affleck said Hart was hired recently as a youth organizer to help "defuse" leftist protests against the company's presence on the island.

Conservative MP Elmer Mackay confirmed this version, but other company officials gave vague accounts of Hart's activities.

Black Rhodesian leader Joshua Nkomo, the BBC and the CBC have alleged that Space Research has been using Antigua as a relay point for arms shipments to South Africa. This has been firmly denied by the company.

Canada, a participant in an international arms boycott against South Africa, has ordered an RCMP investigation of suspected violations by the company, based in Highwater, Que. British and United States authorities are also looking into the allegations.

Earlier this year, Mackay identified Hart, 41, as an RCMP informer whose assignment was to infiltrate black groups, some from the Caribbean, who were engaged in militant protests in Montreal during the early 1970s.

After the affair came to light in the Commons last February, Hart signed an affidavit saying he also met an RCMP request to carry out the electronic bugging of former solicitor-general Warren Allmand and New Democratic MP John Rodriguez.

In a telephone interview from Toronto, Affleck confirmed that Hart was drawing a salary in Antigua as a community worker responsible for organizing steel bands and soccer and basketball teams among young people.

"It was an attempt to defuse protests by leftist groups in Antigua against the arrival of Space Research," Affleck said.

Hart was hired to organize young people on the theory that "the protests arose because they didn't have enough to do."

Mackay contended that Hart was hired to handle public relations for Space Research. He had "experience with radical groups" and his work with the RCMP proved he was one of "the best agents" in calming protest movements.

John Kieran, vice-president for public relations at Space Research, told a different story, saying Hart was employed in Antigua as a bookkeeper, at an undisclosed salary.

Linda Hovey, personnel officer for the company's U.S. subsidiary, based just across the Quebec border in Vermont, said Hart was hired April 3, 1978, as a community organizer.

Wille Lefuich, Hart's lawyer in Washington, D.C., said he knew his client was working in the "security" area, but he had no information Hart was in Antigua.

After Mackay's disclosures earlier this year, a file on Hart was turned over to the federal McDonald commission into RCMP wrongdoing, but no decision has been announced on the possibility of summoning him to testify.

TV men defend border law

WASHINGTON (CP)—Canadian broadcasters argued here this week that tax changes curbing border television advertising were essential to build up the domestic industry and not a valid trade issue for discussion with the United States.

But representatives of 15 U.S. television stations along the border said 1976 Canadian tax law changes were unfair and discriminatory, and asked a U.S. trade committee to recommend retaliatory measures against Canada.

The office of the special representative for trade negotiations, which called the hearing, now must decide whether or not to ask President Carter to take action.

The hearing was the latest step in a long-simmering dispute between broadcasters since Parliament approved income tax changes in 1976 prohibiting Canadian companies from making tax deductions for TV advertising directed primarily at a Canadian audience but shown on U.S. television or other media.

Bart Fisher, counsel for the U.S. companies, claimed cross-border advertising revenues had been cut in half to $9.2 million in 1977 from $18.9 million in 1975 because of the measure.

He called for import prohibitions against Canadian-made films and television programs and tougher auto trade terms unless Canada agreed to relax its tax rules.

But Canadian broadcasters said the tax changes were an internal matter, not subject to U.S. scrutiny, and questioned the Americans' claims of revenue losses.

Ronald Mitchell, president of Moffat Communications Ltd. of Winnipeg, said the "overwhelming impact of the U.S. industry" had been stifling Canadian broadcast development. The tax changes would direct more advertising revenue to Canadian companies for their development.

There was no evidence that jobs had been lost in the U.S. industry because of Canadian tax changes, despite the U.S. complaints of injury, Mitchell added.

Moses Znaimer, president of CITY-TV Ltd. of Toronto, said U.S. broadcasters seemed already to be recouping their initial revenue losses in U.S. markets, where they should seek advertising.

The same point was made by Edward Rogers, president of Rogers Cable TV Ltd. of Toronto, who noted that the U.S. companies didn't offer any net loss figures to back up their case. Furthermore, two of the three Buffalo broadcasters who previously got much advertising revenue from the Toronto market were not even among the complainants, he noted.

The 15 U.S. companies that complained represent fewer than half the 35 stations along the Canadian border. Before the 1976 tax amendments in Bill C-58, they got about 10 per cent of the total $200 million it was estimated Canadian advertisers spent.

The Canadian government, in a note to the U.S. state department filed with the committee hearing, said it felt the domestic industry couldn't afford this drain.

The dispute is unusual, partly because it deals with a service and not a commodity like copper, zinc or agricultural products.

Jerry Grafstein, counsel for Rogers Cable, argued that telecommunication was not a subject for discussion under the U.S. Trade Act at all. It could not be considered a service that accompanied a commercial transaction and should not have been before the trade committee, he argued.

Grafstein also said the Canadian tax changes were meeting their purpose of building up the domestic industry by keeping advertising revenue in Canada. Since the 1976 changes, three new FM stations had been licensed in the Toronto area, and a multi-language station had a licence application under consideration by regulatory authorities.

Any U.S. action counteracting the Canadian tax changes might amount to intervention in Canadian industry, surely not an objective of U.S. trade laws, he suggested.

Fisher, the U.S. counsel, stressed that the complaining U.S. stations preferred a negotiated settlement of the issue between the two governments. But if Canada kept refusing talks, retaliation should be taken, he said.

The U.S. companies also complained that Canadian cable television stations picked up U.S.-generated television signals and transmitted them to serve markets far north of the border. This gave Canadian cable operators a free ride in building a very profitable industry, they said.

Flood relief stepped up

COLOMBO (AP) — President Junius Richard Jayewardene has invoked emergency laws to hasten relief and rehabilitation work in three districts of Sri Lanka ravaged by a cyclone last week. Officials said roads washed away by floods are being repaired but not fast enough for supplies to get to stranded areas so air force flights are being stepped up. An estimated 500 persons died in the eastern provinces Nov. 24 from flooding or mudslides.

M. V. Chesnut's Garden Notes

Several years ago, during the Christmas shopping season, I did a bit of yearning in this column for what, to me, would be an ideal gift — a super-dooper greenhouse with thermostat-controlled electric heating, twin glass insulation, automatic ventilation and automatic irrigation.

Such a superb Christmas present is, of course, beyond the means of us wage slaves, and I thought it might be interesting today to explore some of the less expensive alternatives.

There are, of course, some small greenhouses using plastic film which are quite inexpensive. It must be remembered, though, that a thin sheet of plastic isn't much protection against extreme cold and is more useful for starting plants in the spring than for all winter long use.

It seems to me that a really good coldframe equipped with a soil-heating cable is of more practical use than a plastic film greenhouse.

I understand that plans for a coldframe made from stout, rot-proofed lumber with glass glazing are available from some of the larger lumber and building supply firms, and some firms even supply pre-sawn knock-down frames.

Soil heating cables are not overly expensive, running around $38 for 60-foot lengths of lead-covered cable, capable of warming 36 square feet of soil.

Thermostats are available too, to turn the power off and on, thereby maintaining a constant soil temperature within the frame. The only real difficulty is extending electric power from the house to the site of the coldframe.

A worthwhile alternative to both greenhouse and coldframe is to build a garden room, or even just a garden bench, in your basement, using fluorescent lights instead of natural daylight.

This idea has many advantages; for one thing, your heating costs are nil, for your basement is already heated, and probably to approximately the correct temperature for your plants, which almost always do better at a lower temperature than in our overheated living rooms.

There are special fluorescent tubes on the market designed specifically to provide the right kind of light for growing plants. However, the regular household or commercial tubes are almost as good, especially when combined with ordinary incandescent light bulbs, and are less expensive. Power consumption is low with fluorescent tubes.

The tubes can be mounted in regular fluorescent fixtures and suspended over the plants, or fixtures can be extemporized.

A friend of mine has a highly successful garden bench in his basement equipped with second-hand fixtures purchased very reasonably from a house-wrecking firm.

Whatever fixtures are used, they should have good reflectors to throw all the light down on the plants, and it should be possible to raise or lower the lights according to the needs of the different plants.

For the un-handyman who can't even knock together a plant bench, there are ready-made plant stands equipped with fluorescent lighting; just plug it in and start growing things. In a catalogue before me as I write (C.A. Cruickshank Ltd., 1015 Mount Pleasant Road, Toronto, Ont., M4P 2M1) there is a four-decker stand called the Sunlighter, holding eight trays for plants and three fluorescent light fixtures with six Gro-Lux tubes. It stands 55 inches high, 24 inches wide and 27 inches from back to front, and costs $169.50 complete.

The same catalogue lists a small single-tray stand called the Suntanic, with a two-tube fixture, for around $60 complete, highly ornamental. This one is not free-standing, but would have to sit on a table or bench.

A useful accessory is an automatic clock switch to turn the lights on and off at selected times, giving your plants their daily dosages of 14 to 18 hours of light. A heavy duty time switch suitable for this purpose would cost $12 to $15.

Jack Smith

I have another report on English as it is spoken in the U.S.A.'s capital from my old friend Lu Haas, with whom I used to wonder at the human comedy when we were both reporters on the late Los Angeles Daily News (it was often late even when it was alive.)

Lu was a tough, savvy field man for Alan Cranston in his first campaign, and has been with him ever since, not only serving the senator and the people of California, but also enjoying his front-row seat at the Greatest Show on Earth.

My latest report from Haas is an excerpt from a debate between Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the senator from New York, and Robert W. Packwood, the senator from Oregon. It has been some time since this debate took place, and I have been studying it ever since, but do not yet understand it. I can only tell you that it seems to revolve about a bill to grant tax credits for college tuition.

Obviously, though Packwood is slightly offended because the secretary of health, education and welfare had sent only an assistant to his assistant to explain the bill to the Senate. Packwood has the floor, though precariously, since Moynihan keeps interrupting. The senator from Oregon refuses to yield. We now tune in.

"Mr. Packwood: The secretary's assistant. The secretary's assistant's assistant. What did he say? That they were opposed to our bill because it was too complex.

"Too complex. You know, the problem here, they say, if you have too many children in college — and only a HEW bureaucrat could testify this way — is not that you have too many children too close together, they are all going to college at once, and you could not afford them all. The problem is that you are a victim of sibling overlap.

"Who would use that kind of language except somebody from the department of HEW? The problem is not that you cannot afford to send your children to college. If you could spread it over an entire working life, you could afford it. You are just a victim of a temporary liquidity crisis.

"Mr. Moynihan: Mr. president, will the senator yield?

"Mr. Packwood (evidently out of breath): I yield.

"Mr. Moynihan: Would he explain to us the nature of this disease afflicting so many American households? Sibling overlap?

"Mr. Packwood: A terrible disease. I do not know how many people are killed every year because of it.

"Mr. Moynihan: What is sibling overlap?

"Mr. Moynihan: I see.

"Mr. Packwood: Or, to put it in simple terms, you had too many kids too quick."

Having regained his breath, Packwood goes on at great length, yielding to no one, and in fact Haas did not bother to send me his entire speech, but simply cut it off in the middle of a sentence.

Without knowing any more about it, though, I would like to commend Packwood for taking an oyerweight piece of gobbledygook — sibling overlap — and stripping it down to its bones: too many kids too quick. I am not familiar with Packwood's other virtues, but for this gift alone, I consider that he has the makings of a national hero. Perhaps he is the long-awaited Theseus who will slay the Minotaur and lead us out of the labyrinth.

But who cares, one might ask, what language they use in HEW? What has that to do with us? Alas, the gobbledygook that is bureaucracy's vernacular must be mastered by us all, if we are to claim our just desserts and prosper as free citizens of the welfare state.

It is bad enough that in the age of psychiatry the common man no longer knows how to tell anyone what ails him, and must acquire a grasp of Greek and Latin to explain a simple case of red-eye or the crud; indeed, he even has to learn new and baffling terms for old marital complaints, and almost never gets them right.

An interesting case in point comes from a reader, Nancy White, who asks: "Would you believe I have an acquaintance whose sex life is in jeopardy because she is 'a beast' and her husband is 'impudent?'"

It is presumptuous and risky to offer advice to couples who are having connubial difficulties, but it occurs to me that perhaps Miss White's friend's sex life is threatened because she takes her husband for granted. Apathy on the part of a wife is likely to make any man impudent. My suggestion is that both of them might profit from an exhilarated sex education class of the kind that one of my neighbors says her teen-age daughter is enrolled in.

Sydney Harris

In his valedictory article, Max Beerbohm confessed that for him Thursdays were the least pleasant day of the week. Explaining why, he said that Thursday was the latest possible day he set aside each week to get his writing done.

It is indeed strange how temperaments and habits differ in terms of getting necessary work done. I don't think there is any rule I have ever read that someone has not successfully broken. I am convinced that the best way to work at anything is the way that happens to be best for you.

There are people who are absolutely immobilized until the very last moment, and then throw themselves into a frenzy and do well in an hour or two what they could not have half so well done in a week.

There are those who swoon at the thought of such procrastination; they do what has to be done each day, at the right and proper time, and finish comfortably ahead of schedule. They would panic and collapse if faced with a sudden deadline.

Every one has his own inner "clock" and even "calendar" which may bear only a remote resemblance to public time. Why do I get to an airport in time to take an earlier plane, while my friend arrives just as they are pulling up the gangplank?

I remember being in Hollywood one summer, in a hotel bungalow next door to a famous comic-strip artist, who locked himself in his room for two weeks at a stretch, turning out a six-week supply of cartoons. Then he would loll at the poolside for a month, until the time came to immure himself again. He was, in effect, his own prison warden.

This would drive other artists utterly mad; they work day by day, one day at a time, on a rigid schedule, which is the only way they could meet their professional obligations. Their inner "clocks" are set at a far different beat, or alarm system, than the other.

Some people are so prolific, of course, that it makes little difference how or when they work. It is said that Rossini composed his operas while lying abed in the mornings; if a sheet of paper slipped to the floor, he didn't even bother to retrieve it, but would simply write out another melody.

There are no regulations or prescriptions for creativity, whether it be scientific, intellectual, or artistic. Beerbohm could not have written on Monday to save his soul, as long as he knew he had until Thursday as a deadline. The only rule I have found useful is not to wait for "inspiration" — for work doesn't come from inspiration, but inspiration comes from work.

James Bacon's Hollywood

HOLLYWOD — David Niven almost got his teeth knocked out when he met Elliott Gould in London the other day.

David, who writes as well as he talks, said he sneaked up on Elliott in Turnbull and Esser, London's smartest shirt shop.

Niven didn't say what Elliott was doing there; because Elliott usually dresses like a wino on Skid Row.

"I sneaked up behind my old friend," David writes, "and in Cockney voice said, 'Oi! Yanks orl dess loike garbage men.'

"Before 'garbage men' was halfway out my mouth, Elliott turned like a flash, and it was only by a whisper that my capped teeth didn't get knocked down my throat."

At the time, Elliott was wearing a dreadful freen windbreaker, questionable sneakers and three days' growth of beard. Must have been formal.

A good cameo role in a blockbuster picture and you become a star. It's the old Ruby Keeler story, which Warners made into eight hot movies.

Lorenzo Lamas, 20-year-old son of Fernando Lamas and Arlene Dahl, played the football hero in Grease; I don't think he had a line.

Producer Martin Jurow is convinced that young Lorenzo is going to be the next all-American heartthrob.

The producer has already signed the kid to be the star of The All-Americans, just from the Grease bit.

Black leaders support name of Zimbabwe

By JACK FOISIE

Colonist · Los Angeles Times Service

SALISBURY, Rhodesia — Rhodesia's black leaders, often at odds, agree on one thing: After independence and the establishment of black majority rule the country will be called Zimbabwe.

Whites do not like the prospect, preferring to keep the nation named for Cecil Rhodes, who first claimed the area for Britain in 1890. But as Prime Minister Ian Smith said last week in an interview, "the future name is not an issue" holding up negotiations.

To black nationalists, it is vital that the changeover to majority rule be accompanied by the removal of all reminders of English colonialism. What better alternative, they argue, than to call the land Zimbabwe. Pius Wakatama explained, "To use the name does not speak of a ruin, but the restoration of the glory and the dignity of the black man."

Zimbabwe, which in the Shona tribal language means "the place of stones," refers to an impressive cluster of stone ruins in central Rhodesia. Many archeologists believe they are the remnants of a black city which existed at least 300 years ago.

Those whites who regard blacks, past and present, as a backward race, find it difficult to accept the concept that a black kingdom with a fairly sophisticated civilization existed in southern Africa. Yet there it is, 16 miles southwest of Ft. Victoria, almost a million pieces of granite fitted neatly together to form a beehive-shaped tower, an acropolis, a smelting works and a wall around the complex to keep out invaders.

Some archeologists believe the ruins to be much older. They believe Zimbabwe was settled by wandering Phoenicians. Others believe that it was settled by Arabs, who used black slaves in the building of Zimbabwe.

But blacks reject such speculation, and they are supported by majority archeology opinion: that Zimbabwe was built and settled by blacks, and that what trade existed with Arabs was on a basis of equality. Locally made gold and bronze ornaments, soapstone carvings and ivory were traded for glassware, beads and cloth of the "other world."

The Zimbabwe kingdom declined after the Arab trade ceased, and was eventually invaded and sacked by less civilized black tribes, it is theorized. When discovered in 1869 by Europeans, the city was in ruins. What valuable trinkets remained were soon stolen.

Today Zimbabwe is on the edge of a guerrilla-threatened area. Tourists visit in buses escorted by armed guards. But when peace is restored, the ruins are expected to become a mecca for black visitors.

The Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, one of the three black nationalists who share power with Prime Minister Smith in the present transitional government, wants Rhodesia to be renamed Zimbabwe immediately.

"The change is needed to convince the world we are genuinely on the road to majority rule," he said.

"Rhodesia to Zimbabwe is the inevitable climax in the eyes of the masses, and failure to recognize this is a refusal to accept change by certain people in this country," James Dzvova, a Sithole aide added.

Besides a name change, black cultural groups seek to create a Zimbabwe national dress. European style clothing would be shunned.

"It is part of the liberation process" Tsanga Shanga wrote in the Zimbabwe Times before the paper was closed down by the government.

Several of Rhodesia's leaders have already adopted traditional attire for ceremonial occasions. Bishop Abel Muzorewa sometimes wears a West African style boubou, a colorful flowing garment.

Joshua Nkomo, a guerrilla leader in exile, also wears tribal dress on occasion, although he also has been seen in the uniform of a field marshal. James Chikerema, top aide to Muzorewa, is fond of a leopard skin hat, but he wears it with suits from a London tailor.

The cultural revival also seeks to discourage the use of the English language. "English is the language of the oppressor," Shanga wrote. But he does not suggest that English be elimiated entirely. It is the only medium through which many people of the nation's two major and seven minor tribes can talk to each other.

MR. JOHN JUHL,

Saturday, December 2 9:00 a.m.-4:30 p.m.

This is the FIRST CONTAX/YASHICA weekend that has been held on Vancouver Island and we are sure that you will all enjoy John and his presentation of this great line of photographic products. John is of Danish origin but even Rolf (Swedish origin) likes him. (Scandinavians will know what we mean!) Even Gritt Floss likes him.

EVEN GRITT FLOSS AGREES!
EXCEPTIONAL CAMERAS

we don't often make a definite statement that a certain product is vastly superior to another product among the many lines we carry, BUT we do feel we should, in the case of the present Contax/Yashica line, state very definitely that in terms of quality, features and value this line is the most viable on the market at this time and at the present prices. We feel that Contax/Yashica is still 'buying' its place on the market. We also feel that they have now established themselves so well that prices on these desirable products will rise quickly. The Contax/Yashica line is now, we think the strongest in the photographic industry and will dominate the market in 1979. We would earnestly suggest that purchasing this equipment at our present prices will be a wise investment.

During the two years that Contax and Yashica FR cameras have been available, we have sold a considerable number of these models and
- ★ Not one camera has been returned to us with any malfunction whatsoever
- ★ Not one customer has expressed any dissatisfaction whatsoever
- ★ No other line of equipment we have handled has had such an incredible record of reliability and customer satisfaction.

Danson defends S.I.N. use on mail to servicemen

OTTAWA (CP)—Defence Minister Barney Danson says he sees no sin in the defence department requiring social insurance numbers on mail sent to servicemen.

"In fact, I would be happy to have my thumbprint on it if it would help in identifying me," he said in the Commons Wednesday.

But Conservative MPs said outside the House they saw dangers in widespread use of the numbers, particularly if they were tied to information stored in computers.

The individual had little control over personal information in computers, they said.

Leonard Jones, Independent MP for Moncton, said last week that letters to servicemen in Canada were being returned "because the social insurance number is not included in the address."

Marcel Lambert (PC—Edmonton West) asked Danson in the House Wednesday whether he agreed with the rule.

"It is required for overseas mail and for ships at sea because of the great difficulties experienced if there is not specific identification," the defence minister replied.

Why replace the regimental number with the social insurance number? asked Lambert.

"I have had no complaints from those in the service with reference to this," Danson said. "It seems like a logical application of the social insurance number . . . It is for easy identification.

"I am a little astounded about all the fuss that is made about this. I have never had any objection to it myself."

Lambert said outside the Commons that widespread use of the numbers could be serious, particularly if information got into computers.

"The tie-ups with regard to computer-operated information are limitless. You have no control over it."

NBC broom kills 8 shows in rating race

LOS ANGELES (AP)—NBC, third in U.S. television ratings, has announced major changes in its night schedule, dropping all eight new shows it started the season with.

The network said it would put nine new shows, three of them situation comedies, on the air in late January and early February.

Ten series, nine of them new, have been dropped by NBC. The first to go, earlier this fall, were Waverly Wonders and W.E.B.

Tuesday, it dropped Project UFO, now in its second season, and David Cassidy's new detective series, which was a replacement for W.E.B.

The other new casualties are Lifeline, a medical series, Grandpa Goes to Washington, Sword of Justice, Who's Watching the Kids, Dick Clark's Live Wednesday and The Eddie Capra Mysteries.

The new mid-season lineup is the first one fully prepared under the supervision of program expert Fred Silverman since he left top-rated ABC to run NBC last June, when NBC's fall schedule was already set.

NBC has six new hourly series, including one about the never-seen wife of its famed cop, Columbo.

Three new comedies, all to air Friday nights after the surviving Diff'rent Strokes comedy, are:

● Brothers and Sisters, about fraternity and sorority life at a Midwest college and apparently inspired by the hit movie Animal House.

● Turnabout, based on a Thorne Smith short story, starring John Schuck and Sharon Gless as a married couple who switch identities.

● Hello, Larry, McLean Stevenson's third attempt to click with a series since leaving CBS' *M*A*S*H*. He will play a divorced father trying to raise two teenage daughters.

Also on Friday will be Sweepstakes, a comedy-drama focusing on the finalists in a million-dollar state lottery, and how winning and losing affects their lives.

NBC's other new hour-long series are Mrs. Columbo, a Thursday series starring Kate Mulgrew as the detective's wife; Supertrain, a Wednesday comedy-drama set aboard a huge atom-powered train; and Cliffhangers, three 20-minute weekly serials with a comedy touch.

Also arriving: Little Women, a Thursday mini-series based on the Louisa May Alcott novel, and B.J. and the Bear, a Saturday series about a young trucker (Greg Evigan), featuring Claude Akins of NBC's old Movin' On trucking series as his occasional enemy.

Soviets will annihilate us—Eritreans

KHARTOUM (Reuter)—Eritrean separatists fighting a guerrilla war in an attempt to win independence from Ethiopia say they face annihilation at the hands of troops from the Soviet Union.

In a statement this week, the Marxist Eritrean People's Liberation Front said the Soviet Union's role in the conflict was increasing.

On Monday, the EPLF pulled its forces out of Keren, a mountain-top town 90 kilometres north of the provincial capital of Asmara. Keren had been held by the guerrillas for 16 months.

The statement said the Soviet Union supported the Eritrean cause before the overthrow of Emperor Haile Selassie in 1974, but now supported the government side.

Three MiG jets strafed and bombed a camp north of Keren to which civilians were fleeing, killing 10 people and wounding 65.

EPLF spokesman Issayas Afewerki said the decision to withdraw guerrilla forces from the town was due to "the escalating Russian role and overwhelming Ethiopian armed superiority."

The statement was explicit on Soviet participation. "The MiGs are flown by their pilots. The heavy artillery is manned and fired by Soviet troops.

"On each front, hundreds of Soviet experts are conducting the battles and are shooting on the spot any Ethiopian soldier who attempts to retreat."

Hunter loses son

Quest for elk ends in death

JACKSON, Wyo. (UPI)—An elk hunter who carried one of his young sons through deep snow and rugged forestland to their campsite in the northwest Wyoming wilderness returned to the camp by helicopter Wednesday to find the boy dead and his 12-year-old stepson barely alive.

The fire he had told the boys to keep burning was out, said Sheriff Steve Rogers.

Nick Anastos of Hanna, Wyo., emerged Tuesday from the Teton Wilderness Area east of Grand Teton National Park after he and the two boys had become lost Sunday during a hunting expedition.

"From what I understand, the youngest boy was fatigued so Anastos carried him quite a ways until he couldn't carry him any more," Rogers said. "Then he made a campfire and told them to stay there until he returned.

"He says he left a good stack of firewood, but I guess they ran out of wood or matches."

Authorities said Glenn Anastos, nine, died in the ordeal and his stepbrother, John Pixley, was rushed to a hospital by air force helicopter.

After a brief rest, Anastos joined the search parties Wednesday. There were 14 aircraft aloft in the morning, five men on cross-country skis and three men on horseback. Sheriff's deputies described the region as one of thick forest, high mountain ridges and deep canyons.

No more freebies—Lougheed

CALGARY (CP)—Premier Peter Lougheed said Thursday he would no longer accept free transportation from Canada's national airlines, but he would not reimburse Air Canada or CP Air for six flights he took.

He told a news conference he had been led to believe by a former executive assistant that both airlines had a national policy to provide such trips to the premiers and their families for one return trip on their systems a year.

He said six flights were involved—two with Air Canada and the others with CP Air.

The Air Canada flights were to Barbados, while three CP Air flights were to Hawaii. The fourth CP Air flight was to Los Angeles.

"I thought it (the passes) was a national policy and that it was available to all the premiers of Canada and I was operating on that presumption," he said.

"I've now checked and I find we've been operating over this period of time under a misunderstanding."

In Edmonton, an Air Canada employee who offered free airline tickets to Lougheed said Thursday the corporate policy on such offers was never made clear to him.

"I'm so bloody confused on (this) corporate policy," said Jack Cronin, regional passenger sales manager.

He said the vacation flight to Barbados was worth about $1,000.

Cronin said he was told this week by Air Canada's regional public affairs office that free trips should not be offered to MLAs.

"Nobody has seen it (the policy) in black and white," he said in an interview. But he added: "I find it difficult to defend myself."

Christine Saunders, public affairs assistant for the western region, said, however, that Cronin was "perfectly within his direction at that time."

She said from Vancouver that the western region decided only three years ago, for no particular reason, to discourage offering tickets to MLAs.

Cronin said he made a "spontaneous offer" to Lougheed at a social function.

"He was deserving of it at the time. He was working hard."

He said he regretted the embarrassment Lougheed had suffered, but he saw nothing improper about the offer.

He said the company had often offered tickets to civic politicians.

UIC aid reform pressed

OTTAWA (CP)—Three provinces formally asked Parliament on Thursday to scrap proposed unemployment insurance legislation and replace it with a new benefit system.

Ontario, New Brunswick and Newfoundland social services ministers made the request in a rare appearance before MPs in the Commons manpower committee. MPs are debating a bill that would make about 250,000 persons ineligible for benefits by mid-1981.

Instead of cutting that many persons from benefits when unemployment was high, the provinces proposed that lower benefits be paid to claimants without dependents.

The ministers said their proposal would result in higher savings for the federal government than the legislation would net. They said their proposal was less complex and would not lead to increased welfare costs anticipated if the bill was passed.

The provincial ministers, Keith Norton of Ontario, Leslie Hull of New Brunswick and Hugh Collins of Newfoundland, said they had full support for their request from other provinces except Manitoba, which was still uncertain about the plan.

There's still a N.I.P. in the air

Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet's announcement earlier this week of a $400 million grant program to provide community services across the country during the next two years, has once again raised hopes for a major rehabilitation program in downtown Victoria.

Ald. John Hayes says he believes the city might be able to get some of the $15.2 million earmarked for B.C.

Hayes said Thursday that he would ask Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf to keep Victoria in mind when the time came to distribute the federal grants money.

Hayes, chairman of city council's Neighborhood Improvement Program committee, said the downtown N.I.P project wasn't dead yet.

Before the federal N.I.P. financing was discontinued, the city of Victoria had applied for $2.9 million to upgrade various parts of downtown Victoria.

Hayes said he was confident that Bawlf would support the city's request for a number of reasons.

"He's the MLA for Victoria, his ministry is in charge of distributing recreational and neighborhood improvement funds, and he has been a long-time advicate of improving downtown Victoria.

"I'll have a letter on the minister's desk early next week," Hayes said.

Interior school strike sides summoned here

Labor Minister Allan Williams wants both sides of a West Kootenay schools labor-management dispute in his office at 9 a.m. Monday.

And he wants them to remain there, if possible, until West Kootenay classrooms are again open to students.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees has been on strike since Oct. 26 in a dispute involving the Nelson school district and Selkirk College in Castlegar.

Williams said he wanted representatives of both sides in the dispute to bring him up to date on negotiations, outline what the specific problems were and possibly reach a settlement.

He said he would not request an emergency session of the Legislature under the Essential Services Act if agreement could not be reached.

Asked how long he hoped to keep the representatives in Victoria the minister said, "hopefully, for as long as it takes.

"It can't go on forever, obviously, but maybe with everyone in the same room we can find out just what the problems are and resolve them.

"The main objective is to get the schools open again. That will be my message and hopefully they will listen."

If the parties involved in the dispute do not listen, an industrial inquiry commission could be appointed or a special mediator named.

Terrace-Kitimat flood sparks claims by 520

A total of 520 claims for compensation for damage to personal effects and property as a result of flooding in the Terrace-Kitimat area have been filed with the provincial government, Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy said Thursday.

She said claims, averaging between $3,000 and $4,000 each, have also been received from Port Hardy on northern Vancouver Island, the Queen Charlotte Islands, Bella Coola, Hartley Bay and Stewart.

The region was declared a disaster area by the provincial government after heavy rains and flooding damaged homes and washed out highways, bridges, a gas pipeline and a Canadian National Railways line last month.

"Assessment of claims to permanent residences should be completed by the end of next week," Mrs. McCarthy said. "While we don't know yet what level of assistance will be forthcoming from the federal government, we expect they will assist in paying the claims."

Books pullout costly

The B.C. education ministry decision to withdraw two English textbooks will result in a loss to the education system of reading materials worth about $127,500.

The ministry has advised schools and school boards it was withdrawing the Grade 8 text Incentives and the Grade 9 text Strawberries and Other Secrets. The move follows complaints from adults and students about blunt racial and sexual characterizations and episodes of violence.

There are 85,000 books involved, all paperbacks, which would ordinarily have a shelf life in the schools of three years.

There is no word on what will happen to the textbooks, worth $150 each. One official suggested they would be stored in a government warehouse.

Pension policy pressed

OTTAWA (CP)—Conservative Flora MacDonald urged Thursday that steps be taken to provide pensions for prison employees killed in the line of duty.

Her comments came as the Commons justice committee approved $18,000 for pensions to the families of two prison employees killed in the Montreal area this year.

Two more employees were stabbed to death Sunday at Collins Bay prison in the Kingston area.

Short-list fighter just 'straw man'?

OTTAWA (CP)—The government would have to reassess the $2.3-billion fighter plane program if McDonnell Douglas Corp. dropped out, Defence Minister Barney Danson said Thursday.

He said it would be "very unwise" to continue final negotiations with only one firm—General Dynamics. But he said this was hypothetical, because he had not been told McDonnell Douglas was pulling out.

Danson was commenting on reports that the American firm was considering withdrawing.

The fighter competition was reduced to the General Dynamics F-16 and the McDonnell Douglas F-18A last week. Four other entries were dropped by the cabinet. Final negotiations with the two survivors are expected to begin in January.

Earlier, an informed source, who refused to be identified, said the American firm was considering withdrawing. The company was waiting to see what the ground rules would be in the final stage of the competition.

However, Jack McGrath, a McDonnell Douglas spokesman, said in a telephone interview from St. Louis, Mo., that the company was not pulling out. The company was "taking a whole new look internally" at the competition and no possibility was excluded.

But an informant close to the fighter competition said McDonnell Douglas was worried that the battle for the contract might break down into a "numbers game." The government has said it wants 130 to 150 planes for the $2.3-billion price.

Danson said last week that only General Dynamics met the 130 minimum in the first round, with McDonnell Douglas falling a bit short with its F-18A fighter. But the defence minister said McDonnell Douglas might increase its total in the final negotiations.

Asked about the minimum aircraft numbers the government was willing to accept, Danson said Thursday that the "minimum is 130." The government felt it had to have that number to fulfill its military roles.

McGrath said McDonnell Douglas was "puzzled and disturbed" by some news reports that the F-18A was only in the final round as a tool to pry more out of General Dynamics.

These reports were "truly unfounded," Danson said.

"There has been no final choice. They are both excellent aircraft. Each has features the other doesn't have."

Danson said he did not think McDonnell Douglas would believe reports that the F-18A was only on the short list as a "straw man" to get more out of General Dynamics.

"They are much wiser people than that," he said.

McGrath said McDonnell Douglas was preparing for the next round and waiting to see what the government's ground rules would be.

With the government remaining firm on its target of 130 planes, the pressure is plainly on McDonnell Douglas to increase the number of aircraft it is offering.

The government is expected to complete negotiations in mid-1979. The cabinet will then choose the contract it likes best.

The General Dynamics F-16 is a single-engine aircraft and the F-18A a twin-engine, carrier-based plane.

The F-16 engine has been criticized for stalling in flight, a serious problem for a single-engine plane. But General Dynamics officials say the problem is being cleared up and will be a thing of the past when Canada's first planes are delivered in early 1982.

Gardom mum on judge report

Canadian Press

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Thursday that he would not comment on a report by the Canadian Judicial Council into the affairs of John Farris, former chief justice of B.C., until he had studied it thoroughly.

Justice Minister Marc Lalonde said the council would take no action against Farris, who resigned after his name was found last August in a prostitute's address book.

Gardom said Lalonde provided him with the general substance of the report by telephone, but he had nothing to say at this point.

The attorney-general said there was no evidence of criminality on the part of the former chief justice.

Lalonde said in Ottawa that the RCMP found no evidence that Farris broke the law, and that his resignation was a severe penalty for the allegations against him.

The minister said having sexual relations with a prostitute was not a crime, but a high standard of conduct was expected of all judicial appointees.

Opposition Leader David Barrett said the judicial council's decision against further action in the Farris case was not good enough.

He said the matter could not rest unresolved if the public was concerned about possible connections between the judiciary and the criminal world.

Barrett said Lalonde should provide a detailed statement on exactly what the report contained, and should also consider a public inquiry.

"In the last two years we have had serious charges about the RCMP committing criminal acts. We've had the unfortunate circumstance of federal cabinet ministers resigning and a provincial cabinet minister resigning. All of these things have been held to public scrutiny. I think at this time in our political development, it would be a lot better if a lot more was held openly in public."

Gardom said he and Lalonde discussed possible replacements for Farris as chief justice, and "I understand that will be coming down in about a couple of weeks."

Meanwhile, he said, Mr. Justice John Ruttan had been appointed administrator to represent the queen in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, a duty previously held by Farris.

Labor camp ordeal over

LONDON (Reuter) — Britton Michael Wilson is back home after spending 2½ years in a Soviet labor camp for smuggling marijuana. Wilson, 26, was arrested in April 1976 at Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport.

Bomb rips warehouse

BOLOGNA, Italy (Reuter) — A powerful bomb exploded outside a warehouse owned by International Business Machines Co. , smashing windows and damaging a wall but causing no casualties, police said. A group calling itself Proleterian Squad later claimed responsibility for the attack.

Ouellet squashes rent hike

OTTAWA (CP)—The provinces and the federal government have agreed not to raise rents on newly-constructed low-income and senior citizen housing above rents now paid in about 170,000 existing units, Urban Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet said Thursday.

Ouellet told Herb Gray (L—Windsor West) at a meeting of the Commons social affairs committee that rents on new public housing would be kept at the 16.5-25 per cent of income now charged for public housing in most provinces.

Ouellet caused a furor last spring by announcing that monthly charges in newly-constructed rent-geared-to-income public housing would be 25 per cent of gross income.

He said rents in existing low-income and senior citizen housing would be gradually raised to the 25 per cent level.

Under pressure from tenants organizations and members of his own party, Ouellet said last month he would not raise rent scales for existing units.

Gas fired into crowd

NAPLES, Italy (Reuter) — Police fired tear gas grenades at a crowd of jobless demonstrators who pelted them with stones and tomatoes. The clash followed a peaceful demonstration by about 2,000 persons protesting an official denial of rumors that the region was planning Christmas charity payments to the city's more than 100,000 unemployed.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale, start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Provincial Court

A 28-year-old man who tried to change his plea in Victoria provincial court Wednesday decided not to on Thursday and was given 14 days in jail by Judge Fred Green.

Robert Harold Brummitt, formerly of Victoria but now living in Vernon, changed his plea Wednesday through defence lawyer Jasper Bomhof from an original plea of not guilty to one of guilty.

However, after Green imposed a 14-day jail sentence, Brummitt became agitated and tried to change his plea back to not guilty.

Brummitt had been charged with breach of probation by failing to report to his probation officer as directed. He was convicted April 13, 1978 in Victoria County Court of possession of stolen property and was given a three-month jail term and two years' probation. The only condition of Brummitt's probation was that he report to the probation officer as directed.

After lengthy argument by Bomhof, who eventually withdrew from the case, and crown counsel N.K. Varma which took most of the afternoon, Green withdrew the sentence but ruled that the guilty plea remain on record. He remanded the case one day to allow Brummitt a chance to speak with the probation officer involved.

In his brief appearance Thursday afternoon, Brummitt maintained his guilty plea and then apologized for his actions in the courtroom the day before.

Green said the 14-day sentence stood, less one day for the time he had already spent in custody.

A 17-year-old was given 10 months in jail and placed on 15 months' probation for an indecent assault on a nine-year-old boy.

Green imposed the sentence on 17-year-old Colin Caldwell and also gave the youth a 10-month, concurrent sentence for the unlawful confinement of the same child.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the court the incident took place Nov. 3 when Caldwell took the boy, who was waiting for a bus, to a church on Oldfield Road where he performed an indecent act on the youngster. Mulligan said Caldwell also held the boy until the bus went by and threatened him with a knife.

Caldwell had also pleaded guilty to two counts of theft, involving binoculars and a camera from an Oldfield Road address the same morning and about $24 from his foster mother, possession of stolen property, and taking a car from his foster parents without their consent.

Mulligan said Caldwell was convicted on Sept. 5 this year of theft and was given a suspended sentence plus 15 months' probation and on Oct. 27 for possession of a dangerous weapon in connection with a knife and a 10-year-old girl living at the same foster home as Caldwell at the time. He was given another suspended sentence and again placed on 15 months' probation.

Defence lawyer Barry Mah Ming said the human resources ministry did not seem to have any facilities to help Caldwell at this time and was placed in the unfortunate position of supporting a term of incarceration.

Green handed out two concurrent terms of three months and one concurrent term of four months in connection with the other convictions.

A pre-sentence report was ordered for Dec. 21 for 19-year-old Donald Kirby Langstaff, 50 Montreal, after he pleaded guilty to a Nov. 16 break-in at the James Bay Inn, 270 Government.

Court was informed Langstaff was found inside the inn at about 3:45 a.m. with 12 Cornish game hens in his possession by Victoria city police, who were on routine patrol and noticed an unlocked door.

Gary Keith Sawin, 26, of 973 Lovat, was denied bail on a charge of possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

Defence lawyer Lenore Boyes elected trial by judge without jury and Sawin was remanded to today to fix a preliminary hearing date.

Thomas Armer, 17, was sentenced to six months in jail for stealing money from a poppy fund container at the Strathcona Hotel and a further four months for possession of $1,780 worth of stolen items.

Court was told the stolen goods included a sleeping bag, tapes, and camera equipment which were in an auto parked in front of 528 Lampson.

Fined for drinking-driving were: Evan Douglas Neeves, 21, of 10208 Third Street in Sidney, $350; and Michael George Hibberson, 20, of 8511 Bourne Terrace, $250.

In addition, Hibberson was fined $100 for driving while his licence was suspended.

Dealer in drugs jailed

Gilbert Leon Beaudry, 25, was sentenced Thursday in Victoria County Court to six months in jail for trafficking MDA and marijuana to an undercover policeman more than a year ago.

Judge D.H. Campbell found Beaudry guilty of selling 50 capsules of MDA for $140 and a baggie of marijuana for $20 to Constable John Pliszka on March 28, 1977 in Esquimalt.

Beaudry, a Victoria man, has a criminal record including three convictions for possession of narcotics and one of possession of a restricted drug for the purpose of trafficking.

We're homesick, say FLQ suspects

PARIS (Reuter)—A French-Canadian couple wanted for the 1970 kidnapping in Montreal of British trade commissioner James Cross confirmed Thursday that they would return to Canada soon from exile in Paris.

Louise Cossette-Trudel, who works in an office here under her maiden name of Lanctot, told reporters she and her husband, Jacques, intended to return to Montreal Dec. 17.

The two were among five members of the Front de Liberation du Quebec flown to Cuba in return for the release of Cross, who was held for two months.

Mrs. Cossette-Trudel said they wanted to go home despite warnings from Canada that they would be arrested on arrival. They were leaving France because of homesickness, she said.

The Cross kidnapping and the later abduction and murder of Quebec Labor Minister Pierre LaPorte prompted a crisis in 1970 which led Prime Minister Trudeau to ban the FLQ and send troops into Quebec.

The three other FLQ members flown to Cuba are also reported to be living in France, but have shown no signs of wanting to return to Canada.

CARACAS (AP) — Blind Venezuelans are refusing to vote in Sunday's presidential election with assistance and have developed their own method to keep their votes secret, says the newspaper El Nacional. Hector Morillo, one of the delegates, said about 6,000 blind voters will use a special cardboard template to cover the ballot.

Why make an issue a year late?

Diplomats puzzled by furore over Cuba's MiGs

By JOHN VIRTUE

HAVANA, Cuba (UPI) — Western diplomats in Havana are puzzled over why the United States has picked this time to make an issue of the Soviet MiG-23 warjets that Cuba says it acquired a year ago.

President Fidel Castro appeared angry — and aides said he was — when the issue of the swing-wing MiGs was raised at a news conference in Havana with foreign journalists last week.

Castro said the planes have been in Cuba for more than a year, have been flying for eight months and will be displayed at the Jan. 2 celebrations marking the 20th anniversary of the revolution.

He said the U.S. intelligence agencies were "idiotic" if they hadn't known about the MiGs until two weeks ago, when Washington ordered SR-71 spy planes to fly over Cuba to check on the MiGs.

President Carter said he wants to know whether the planes are able to carry nuclear weapon — a violation of the U.S.-Soviet agreement that settled the 161 Cuban missile crisis. Moscow has denied the planes can carry such weapons.

"The planes are tactical, defensive," the angry Castro told foreign journalists last week.

Some of the diplomats share Castro's public astonishment that the United States claims to have just recently learned of the presence of the swing-wing fighters in the Caribbean island.

Western diplomats, western reporters based in Cuba and the average Cuban citizen say they have known about the presence of the MiG-23s in Cuba for many months.

"If Castro says the planes have been in Cuba for more than a year, then they've been here for more than a year," said one Western diplomat.

"Castro does not lie in public. He might not tell everything or he might shade the truth, but he never lies."

Last week three MiGs made a low-level pass over Havana, zipping by the old U.S. embassy building that now houses the only American diplomatic outpost in Cuba, the U.S. Special Interests Section.

Many Cubans mistakenly thought the jets were either the U.S. spy planes or warjets sent in from an aircraft carrier taking part in U.S.-British war games off the northern coast of Cuba.

But at least one American diplomat who was at the U.S. Interest Section when the MiGs went overhead swore they were MiG-23s — Castro's unique way of thumbing his nose at the United States.

THE ACES

IRA G. CORN, JR.

"The only way to get rid of a temptation is to yield to it." – Oscar Wilde.

Today's declarer yielded to the temptation of developing four or five tricks before trying to take one. It wasn't until the game was lost that he realized that his priorities had been misplaced.

Declarer won East's spade jack with his king and took an immediate diamond finesse, losing to East's king. East returned the spade nine that declarer ducked, but West overtook with his 10 and returned the spade queen to establish the suit.

Now declarer could take only eight tricks. When declarer tried for a ninth trick by leading towards dummy's heart king, West stepped up with his ace and cashed two more spades and the game was down one.

Declarer was right in not ducking the first spade. Had he done that, a club shift by East would have rested all on a winning diamond finesse. Where declarer made his mistake is in the timing of the play of the red suits. And instead of routinely playing his longest suit, he should have reasoned as follows:

"If the diamond finesse is onside, there will be no problem in taking nine tricks. Therefore, I must assume that the diamond finesse will lose. If so, where is the only other possibility for scoring a trick? West must have the ace of hearts. Which suit should I play first? The answer is obvious – the suit in which the danger hand has the entry."

After winning the first spade, declarer should lead a low heart to dummy's king. If West takes the ace, the defense is finished. If not, dummy's king wins and declarer leads a club to his king to attack the diamonds. The finesse loses, but now declarer can cash nine quick tricks to end the rubber.

Hewitt cools growers' anger

RICHMOND (CP)—A recent legislature committee report condemning British Columbia marketing boards contains errors, out-of-date information and omits new developments, according to provincial Agriculture Minister James Hewitt.

Food producers and distributors, however, should learn from the report's valid criticisms and not tear it apart, he said.

Hewitt made the remarks to about 300 delegates at the 45th annual convention of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture following criticism of marketing boards by the legislature's agriculture standing committee last week.

After a 1½-year study of the marketing system, the committee called the Interior Vegetable Marketing Board the worst in B.C. and criticized the B.C Tree Fruit Marketing Board for failing to update its operations.

The Interior Vegetable Marketing Board has demanded an apology.

Hewitt said some of the committee's report was in error and other portions failed to recognize changes the industry had already made, but it still contained valid criticism which boards and producers should heed.

He also said the media had seized on the most detrimental aspects of the report and ignored the constructive criticisms it contained.

The boards, he said, should launch a public relations campaign to correct some of the misconceptions the public had about their function, some created by the media.

After telling cheering delegates that he firmly supported marketing boards, Hewitt said they should be big enough to accept the criticism.

He said the final report of the committee would be factual and point out changes that should be made.

Hewitt said that, contrary to the report, the B.C. Tree Fruits Marketing Board had taken steps to streamline its packaging operations.

While he didn't reject the condemnation of the Interior Vegetable Marketing Board, he said his ministry had been encouraging that board and the Coast Vegetable Marketing Board to amalgamate, in view of the Interior board's dwindling volumes and higher levies during the past few years.

Hewitt said B.C.'s agriculture sector had improved this year, with farm cash receipts rising to $384.7 million for the first nine months of 1978, up 8.2 per cent from the first nine months of last year.

'Hideous' banking loophole plugged

—CP

KENNETT, left, inspector-general of banks, greeted by House finance committee chairman Robert Kaplan before testifying Thursday.

Lost revenue: $500 million

OTTAWA (CP) — Government officials uncovered "a pretty hideous kind of situation" in the chartered banks last month after a two-year investigation of their security holdings.

The findings of the inquiry were released Thursday by William Kennett, inspector general of banks, in an appearance before the Commons finance committee. Kennett said the investigation helped convince Finance Minister Jean Chretien to close a controversial tax loophole in his recent federal budget.

Chretien provoked widespread criticism in the business community two weeks ago by announcing that two highly-popular financing arrangements between the banks and large corporations—income debentures and term-preferred shares—would no longer be tax deductible.

The government decided to halt the financing arrangements because income earned by the banks from them was classed as tax-free dividends rather than taxable interest. Federal and provincial treasuries had lost an estimated $500 million so far and authorities estimated another $150 million would have been lost to the federal government in 1979-80.

The government inquiry showed the two controversial financing arrangements accounted for 80 per cent of all chartered bank holdings of securities in Canadian corporations by October 1978. Two years earlier, they accounted for just 29 per cent.

In dollar terms, these holdings jumped to $7.2 billion from $765 million two years earlier—almost a tenfold increase.

Kennett released these figures at the request of Sinclair Stevens, Conservative finance critic. Stevens earlier asked the finance ministry officials for an idea how widespread the problem had become.

Kennett said his investigation showed that the banks and corporations considered these tax-deductible arrangements a low-cost substitute for normal business loans.

"As someone concerned with the capital markets of this country, I became more and more uneasy."

He said he was pleased and relieved when Chretien decided to change the income tax law in his budget to close off these arrangements.

The public probably had little idea of the extent to which banks used these arrangements because current disclosure rules allow them to go for months without making them known, Kennett said.

The government has come under fire from both opposition parties over the timing of the decision to close the tax loophole.

Airlines freebies: Some OK, others not

● No more free flights for me, says Lougheed. Page 45

Premier Bennett has decreed that no one in his office is to accept free trips on airlines but one of his cabinet ministers said she took a free flight to Hawaii two years ago.

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy said she represented the government on the inaugural flight by Pacific Western Airlines to Honolulu and did not see anything wrong with a politician taking that type of trip.

Opposition leader David Barrett said that when the New Democratic Party was in power Dave Stupich (NDP—Nanaimo) represented the B.C. government on a Japan Air Lines inaugural flight.

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said earlier the government does not have any rules against accepting free trips on airlines.

THE ISSUE WAS RAISED after Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed says he accepted free trips from CP Air, a private airline.

A spokesman in Bennett's office said Thursday the premier ruled "from day one, that nobody in his office, including himself, was to accept free transportation."

He said the premier decided the acceptance of free trips was wrong because they carried an obligation or what could be seen as an obligtation.

The spokesman said he could not speak for other ministries but presumed the premier's rules applied.

McCarthy said Thursday she put an end to her staff using free airline tickets on assuming the travel industry portfolio. She said that before she became minister, staff in the ministry were being offered and using free airline tickets and hotel space.

NEILSEN SAID MINISTERS have never been told it would be acceptable to take a free trip from an airline for holiday purposes, but "I don't think there is a written restriction on that."

He said he personally would find it inappropriate to accept a free trip from an airline for holiday purposes, but he does not feel accepting such trips leaves a politician open to pressure from airlines.

Barrett said the policy of the previous NDP government was that there would be no free trips. He said on official inaugural flights, when the government was to be represented, a government representative was sent.

He said Stupich, the former provincial finance minister, travelled on a Japan Air Line inaugural run as official government representative as requested.

"We go to openings or things like that. But no free trips. That was our policy. And I took none, and to my knowledge cabinet ministers did not take any."

All members of the Legislature are issued free passes on the government-owned B.C. Ferry Corporation, Vancouver Island Coach Lines and Pacific Stage Lines, as well as CP Rail, Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, B.C. Coast service and Canadian National Railways.

The CP Rail and CNR passes are valid on all lines for cabinet ministers but the others are limited to free transportation within the province, a spokesman said.

Somoza may go —after 2 votes

MANAGUA (AP) — President Anastasio Somoza said Thursday that he is willing to put his job on the line in a countrywide plebiscite to determine if the Nicaraguan people want him to remain in office.

But Somoza said in a nationally televised news conference he would not resign immediately if the plebiscite showed the people opposed him.

Somoza said if the plebiscite went against him another election would be held—not for the presidency but for seats in the National Assembly. He said the National Assembly then would choose his successor and he would not leave office until after a successor was chosen.

Somoza was asked why he had changed his mind after insisting during a year of guerrilla war and political turmoil that he will stay in office until his current elected term expires in 1981. Somoza said: "In politics, only the rivers never run backward."

Yarrows served strike notice

BY DON COLLINS
Colonist reporter

The twin shipyards of Yarrows in Esquimalt and Burrard in North Vancouver were hit with 72-hour strike notice Thursday by union officials representing approximately 800 tradesmen.

Jim McAvoy, president of the Joint Shipyard Conference, said mediator Ken Albertini would be asked today to report out of the case to pave the way for a possible walkout.

"If management wants to get serious and get down to negotiations we'll meet with them. But if not they'd better face the fact there are going to be a lot of people on the street," McAvoy said.

The Joint Shipyard Conference is the umbrella structure for 22 unions that bargain with the Burrard-Yarrows shipbuilding interests. About 200 of the 800 tradesmen are in Greater Victoria.

The unionists voted almost a month ago in favor of strike action if necessary, but at that time mediation hadn't begun.

McAvoy said mediation was adjourned after meetings Monday and Tuesday of this week. He said strike notice was served at noon Thursday in compliance with a decision by the conference membership.

Albertini would have to officially give up his attempts to mediate a settlement before a strike could begin legally. While the strike notice gives the tradesmen the right to walk out in 72 hours if Albertini is out of the case, they have a maximum of 90 days in which to act.

According to McAvoy, the major snag concerns six or seven items related to fringe benefits. The unions want a shorter work week, although they say they aren't specifying a definite number of hours at this point. They are also attempting to improve vacation and severance pay agreements.

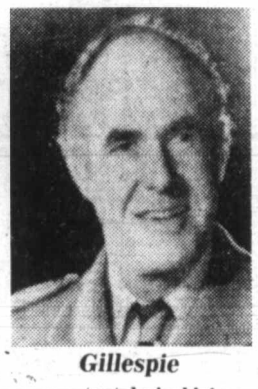
The shipyards have been facing a fairly high rate of unemployment. An announcement earlier this week disclosed that Yarrows had been awarded a $100,000 drydocking contract for the Alaska ferry Columbia, something that was expected to provide about 100 men with seven to 10 days' work. There are reportedly 160 men employed at the yards now.



Gillespie
. . . 'not desirable'

Lougheed sees crisis over delay in oil-hike

CALGARY (CP) — Federal proposals to delay a Jan. 1 oil-price increase of three cents a gallon might result in a serious crisis in Confederation, Premier Peter Lougheed said Thursday.

Earlier in the day, federal Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said Ottawa felt it was not desirable to have the Jan. 1 increase, adding that any subsequent oil-price increases would not be automatic if they would be detrimental to Canada.

At a news conference, Lougheed said if that was Gillespie's position, then Alberta would revert to its original stance that both governments signed a binding agreement calling for the Jan. 1 increase.

"The nine other energy ministers and the premiers said if there was a binding agreement, it should be lived up to," he said.

"You should then ask him (Gillespie) 'Are you going to unilaterally break an agreement with the government of Alberta that the other governments said should not be breached?'

"What kind of federal state are we going to have, that somebody is going to breach an agreement?"

"Now if what he is saying, as part of a negotiation ploy, that we're going to go with the alternative that (Alberta Energy Minister Don) Getty and Mr. Gillespie discussed,

TIME RUNS OUT FOR TIMES

LONDON (AP) — Officials of the London Times, an institution of British life and journalism, announced Thursday the paper is suspending publication in a showdown with labor unions.

The suspension was announced at a news conference by the paper's managing director, Marmaduke James Hussey.

He said there will be no edition today of the 193-year old newspaper and that the suspension would continue indefinitely.

Other papers of Fleet Street warmly praised The Times in fighting the test battle over new technology and union discipline.

But the National Graphical Association (NGA), one of nine major unions at the paper, remained adamant that it would not dicker under threat of shutdown.

The Times' management was not backing down on opposing wildcat strikes that Lord Thomson of Fleet, Toronto-based president of Times Newspapers, says are necessary to keep the paper and its sister publications

● Dropoff points, donations list, Page 2.

Sometimes he talks to pigeons.

Nothing to laugh at, really.

When you're old and lonely and you're feeding them anyway, why not give them a word or two of affection? Or tell them what you think is wrong with the world?

For one thing, they don't talk back or make any cruel wisecracks like some of the people he meets.

That's the way the old man likes to look at it—at least on those days when the aches and pains of age subside enough to let him wander through the streets.

Feeding his feathered friends is about the biggest thing life has to offer him these days. To look at him, you'd think it was enough. The smile is usually in place. And those eyes of his seem to be forever laughing at the world.

He'd probably laugh at the thought of having to eat a sandwich and soup for Christmas—the kind of meal he could afford on his own limited funds. But inside he'd be hurting a little. There's something about being forgotten at Christmas that does that to people.

Fortunately, there are people like the Colonist readers to add at least a glimmer of joy to Christmas for the less fortunate members of our society—the old, the forgotten, the deserted, and those who are handicapped in one way or another. They do it through the Colonist 500 Fund.

As a result, an old man who cares about the welfare of pigeons will have someone caring about him this Christmas.

Terror strikes Ulster towns

BELFAST (AP) — Nineteen bombs exploded in 11 towns and villages in Northern Ireland on Thursday night in what authorities called part of a terror campaign against commercial targets by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

The only injuries reported by police were two policemen slightly hurt by an incendiary device in Ballygawley, 64 kilometres southwest of Belfast, and two young children slightly hurt in Armagh, the worst hit town, 56 kilometres southwest of here.

In Lurgan, 32 kilometres southwest of Belfast, dozens of members of the Jehovah Witnesses religious sect escaped injury when a bomb exploded next door to where they were holding a prayer meeting.

Tests predicted quake—scientist

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — A University of Texas scientist said Thursday a team he worked on predicted Wednesday's devastating earthquake in Mexico more than a year ago but that red tape prevented them from sending experts and equipment to the scene to lessen its impact.

"We had a program approved by the USGS (United States Geological Survey) but they were not able to come up with funding," lamented Dr. Gary V. Latham, associate director of the Geophysics Laboratory at UT's Marine Science Institute in Galveston.

"It's just a terrible shame," he said in a telephone interview from his Galveston office.

"We were able to forecast the location of the centre of quake to within about 25 miles," Latham said.

Doing the hustle —Vancouver style

By DON COLLINS
Colonist reporter

One recent evening in Vancouver I stepped out of a downtown hotel and was mistaken for a judge three times before reaching the corner.

Mistake No. 1 was made by a small blonde with a winning smile.

The same approach was made in quick order by a pair of equally attractive brunettes.

The only missing element in this comedy scene was someone standing on the corner shouting: "Here come de judge . . . here come de judge."

It was, you see, the very same corner involved in Vancouver's judge-meets-prostitute case. That is, Case No. 1. It is necessary to be specific at such times, since the city ended up with two cases involving the names of judges and young women.

To be fair, it's no longer a question of how a judge happens to contact a Lady of the Night in downtown Vancouver, but how he can manage to avoid it.

They're everywhere . . . standing in groups of four and five . . . hovering in doorways . . . lining the outside of buildings . . . coming at you individually, or two and three abreast . . . even occasionally peeking around telephone poles at you.

There is, of course, good reason for this bumper crop on the otherwise barren stretches of West Georgia Street. A court decision some time ago made it possible for enterprising young businesswomen to work the streets free of arrest—as long as they weren't overbearing in making their pitch.

It was all the encouragement that was needed for an amazing rebirth of free enterprise, sidewalk style.

As one who has made an exhaustive study of the trade in the past (purely for journalistic reasons, of course) I decided during

Capital region weighs supermayor proposal

By NANCY BROWN
Colonist reporter

It would be a great idea to have a supermayor of the Capital Region District elected at large, most members of the region's executive committee agreed Wednesday.

They were discussing the Regional District Review Committee report in preparation for a Union of B.C. Municipalities meeting on the subject, when they succumbed to chairman Jim Campbell's eloquence and agreed to the report's recommendation.

Some committee members disagreed at first with the concept but at the end only Saanich Ald. Howard Sturrock remained opposed.

Campbell pointed out that under the report recommendations all other regional directors would be elected to represent individual areas.

"It is important," said Campbell, "that there is a constituency which is seen to be regional. There would be at least one person on the board who could say that he did not represent one particular area but the region as a whole. No one can do that now."

At present the board chairman is elected by directors from among themselves, and Campbell said that means the chairman has a mandate only to represent the other 17 directors plus the electoral area or municipal voters from one area.

"At the moment there is no one here who can rise above parochialism and remain true to his constituents," he said, adding that he realized directors do frequently put the regional concept ahead of narrow parochial needs, but that in doing so they put themselves in jeopardy.

Sooke director Charles Perkins at first said he viewed the position of mayor as archaic, and preferred the idea of someone who was simply chairman of the board, but changed his mind later, saying that Campbell was "very persuasive."

Sturrock said he thought the idea unworkable, while Victoria Ald. Murray Glazier warned that such a system would favor an urban candidate who would be better known to a large segment of voters than a candidate who lived in a sparsely-populated electoral area.

He also thought a regional mayor's seat would be an attractive proposition for political parties to "get their man a position on the regional board."

Campbell said he had never been afraid to take a course of action which might fail because of public gullibility.

"I don't have that lack of faith," he said. "I think people are capable of making good decisions.

Campbell
. . . eloquent advocate

Sturrock
. . . 'unworkable'

"We can't back away from something because the voter might make a mistake," he added. "I think they will elect somebody and if he makes a mistake they will fire him."

There are 52 recommendations in the review committee report which was commissioned early this year by Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis, who has predicted "major surgery" for regional districts.

There will be a special UBCM meeting in Vancouver Dec. 11 to discuss the proposals, which may form the basis of legislation expected in the next session.

Exports near record

NANAIMO — Exports of forest products through the port of Nanaimo are expected to reach 760,000 tons this year, a 12-per-cent increase over the record set in 1977.

"Based on our performances in October and predicted cargoes to the end of the year we should easily exceed last year's total of 672,357," said Nanaimo Harbor Commision chairman Don Rawlins.

He said the increase was mainly due to shippers using the port for assembling larger cargoes.

"Export markets for lumber are extemely buoyant," Rawlins said.

He said lumber shipments should reach 540,000 tons this year, breaking last year's all-time high of 366,419.

"Nanaimo is handling more shipments of lumber coming by barge from the mainland," Rawlins said. "The port has built up a reputation for the efficient handling of barges and our unloading times are highly competitive."

Lightning downs plane

COTTAGEVILLE, S.C. (UPI) — An Air Force C-130 cargo plane, struck by lightning in a thunderstorm, crashed in flames on a farm Thursday, killing at least three of the six men aboard.

Air Force officials, hoping that some of the crew may have escaped by parachute, said the search would resume at daybreak today.

Malaspina funding project in final stages

NANAIMO — A community based foundation for Malaspina College is now in the final planning stages. Its establishment has been a high priority since Joy Leach was named to take the first position to be created for a special funding officer in the B.C. college system.

The job, funded by a special $20,000 grant from the Ministry of Education, extends to the end of the current financial year, March 31, 1979, and has already secured substantial benefits for the college. Early indications are that it will lead to major advances for both college and community in the years ahead.

THIS UNIQUE PILOT PROJECT is one that has already created considerable interest in academic circles with other colleges more than anxious to profit from expertise that Malaspina is developing. Funds for educational and community directed projects and facilities that do not fall within normally accepted instructional guidelines, are in particularly short supply these days and identifying alternate sources of support is becoming more and more important.

Ms. Leach, who started work in her new position in September, says:

"The job at this particular time is one of resource development. We certainly aren't going to sit around complaining that funding is drying up or being reduced. I am determined to work imaginatively and energetically toward identifying funding sources which will enable Malaspina College to continue its quality community programs."

SHE HAS ALREADY SECURED a substantial bequest from one resident and the necessary steps have been taken to set up an endowment fund with its own special tax relief number.

"This means the college is now able, for the first time, to plan around an independent perpetual funding source and to protect gifts and donations made to us by private individuals and business concerns."

Outlining the benefits of the proposed foundation, she explained that donors could support the fund in different ways.

"They can give direct to the college without any direction as to how the money is to be used or they can make a donation with very specific instructions and we will, of course, carry out their wishes," she said.

"I AM SURE THAT PEOPLE will respond favorably to the concept of a foundation. The money will be invested as capital in insurable bonds and securities and only the interest will be used for the good of the community as a whole. This means that the benefits being derived from the gift will go on as long as the foundation is in existence and that could be forever as far as I am concerned."

She went on to say that the general fund would be administered by a representative board of directors with donors being given the opportunity to support any one of a number of special projects initiated by the college. Examples she gave included the Madrona Centre, the Summer Arts Festival, the Morrell Wildlife Sanctuary, the College Arboretum and the Arts and Lectures Series.

"THESE ARE ALL ON-GOING activities based on Malaspina College and we hope there will be many more equally exciting developments in the next few years. The important thing for people to remember is that there is only so much money that can come from the Ministry of Education. We simply have to go out and raise the rest ourselves."

The college's new fund-raising initiative is also proving to be a benefit to other groups within the community and seems certain to extend throughout the whole college region, which extends from Bowser south to Lake Cowichan and across the Georgia Strait to Powell River.

Ms. Leach has recently been approached by both School District 68, which is planning to focus attention on multi-culturalism, and by another group interested in activities associated with the International Year of the Child.

"I FOUND THAT THE SECRETARY of State's department would support both projects and, while the college as an institution would not be eligible for funding, it could act as the co-ordinating agent and give very positive direction to both oranizations."

Ms. Leach has already been in touch with foundations and government agencies across the country and is learning more every day of the many ways and means that are available for individuals and groups to raise often substantial sums of money. "If a community group has a project that it feels the college might like to sponsor then the organizers should get in touch with me right away," she urged.

AS THE GENERAL REVENUE fund is built up, and Ms. Leach is already talking in terms of a $1,000,000 target over a two-year period, she sees the college also being in a position to offer matching funds to groups that have already raised money in other ways.

"The Vancouver Foundation works this way in many cases and look at what it has been able to do for the people of British Columbia down through the years."

Like many others associated with the college, Ms. Leach is more than conscious of the fact that every time someone has come up with a good idea, one with wide ranging benefits, he or she has had to go cap in hand to the community for financial assistance.

"WE HAVE HAD WONDERFUL support in the past," she said, "but we know there has to be a limit to the number of times we can expect people to help us. For this reason we see the foundation being in a position to provide funding on a perpetual basis and we hope to encourage as many people as possible to support us in this way.

"A single donation will go on making its contribution for years and years. Perhaps I could liken it to placing a rock on a cairn. It will be there for always," she said.

Council bids farewell to Virostko, MacKay

Nanaimo aldermen busy in last session of terms

By DONNA REIMER
Colonist correspondent

NANAIMO — It was the last meeting for two veteran aldermen Monday, and they found themselves dealing with everything from a fish processing plant to historic trees.

Aldermen Alex Virostko and Sandy MacKay received a farewell tribute from fellow aldermen at the end of Monday's council meeting, with Ald. Gertrude Hall remarking that the two were "a perfect example of people absolutely dedicated to the betterment of the community."

MacKay was defeated in his bid for re-election in the city centre ward and Virostko, alderman from Harewood, was defeated in a try for mayor.

Alarmed at reports that the Tradewinds fish processing plant would be located in the Chase River industrial park, council took action to stop a building permit for the project while the city draws up a zoning bylaw regulating noxious uses.

But, events since the council meeting Monday required another meeting on the fish processing plant Thursday.

What the city planned to do was restrict the noxious uses in the light industrial zone, and create another zone for such uses, so that they could be directed to areas where they would not affect the neighborhood.

Council directed the building inspection department to withhold any building permit for a fish processing plant while the zoning changes were drawn up.

Alex Ferguson, alderman for Chase River, had asked the council to do what it could to slow up the process so that the problem of the potential plant could be investigated.

A problem of a different sort was presented by two English chestnuts on Fry Street.

Pajic and M Construction Co., which has a new building at 222 Fry Street, wants to cut down at least one tree for access to the loading bays in the building.

But, a memo from the city's engineering staff noted that the company had been specifically told before the building was erected that the trees could not be cut down.

The trees are on the boulevard and are estimated to be more than 100 years old, two of the few remaining English chestnuts in the city.

Ald. Gino Sedola said that the events made it appear almost deliberate that the building had been situated in such a way that the trees would have to come down, despite the warning.

He added that he was not usually a vindictive person, but that if anything happened to the trees he believed monuments should be erected in the same spot.

The rest of council agreed with Sedola, refusing to order a wider access that would mean the end of the trees.

The city now officially has a new parks and recreation commission bylaw. The legislation setting up the new commission was adopted Monday night.

Mayor Frank Ney expressed concern that the new commission might not be responsive to the council, because he felt the bylaw gave almost total power for appointment of five council representatives to the federation of community groups.

Ney said that the way he read the bylaw, he believed that if the federation submitted only five names for the five positions on the commission, the council was obligated to accept those names.

The mayor expressed his concern when the list of the five proposed nominees for 1979 were presented to the council. But at the time for final adoption of the bylaw, it passed without comment.

Names that have been proposed for the council appointees to the commission are Dick Reiber, representing the community association groups; Helena Savory, representing independent clubs; Roy Plater, representing cultural groups; Ken Ozero, representing sports groups and Howard Johnston, representing service clubs.

The council Monday approved the recommendation from the budget committee that the trip be made to talk with the various provincial government departments involved.

January 10 has been suggested as the date for the trip.

The council agreed with a motion by Ald. Ada Howden that the park be renamed the Mae Richards Bennett Pioneer Park, in honor of Mrs. W.A.C. Bennett.

Mrs. Bennett was born in Wellington, when it was a coal mining community, and spent her early childhood there.

Mrs. Howden said that Mrs. Bennett was an example of a devoted, loving wife and deserved the recognition of the park re-naming.

The Christmas season brings with it an increase in thefts, and the Nanaimo RCMP told city council of plans to patrol the downtown area to reduce those crimes during the holiday shopping season.

In his report to council, Inspector George Strathdee said that from now until Dec. 22, there would be foot patrols of regular and auxiliary constables in the downtown area.

Particular attention will be paid to parking lots and areas where thefts from vehicles occur, Strathdee said.

"During the Christmas rush, we hope to reduce thefts from vehicles by a significant degree," Strathdee said.

They're a striking family

PARKSVILLE — Can it be that the family that karates together, stays together?

In the case of the Zinck family it would seem so.

For the past six months the Zincks— Larry, Ruth and daughters Paula and Linda—have been regular attendants—at Jim MacDonald's Bateson Karate School in Parksville. And, the Zincks say, in that short time their outlook on life has changed, for the better.

Father Larry admitted that as a young man he performed calisthenics and tried to keep in shape generally. But, for the past 20 years or so, he has got away from that routine. Karate, he says, has been a rebirth, an awakening, and now he looks sharp and apparently is quite fit.

The fact Ruth has "redistributed some weight" and lost pounds through the rigorous workouts and exercises Jimmy Mac puts his students through, is, she feels, an added benefit she is pleased to have.

Daughters Paula and Linda, while appearing somewhat shy and saying little, did, however, show that to tangle with either or both would be to invite disaster.

In talking about the family's new-found interest, Ruth Zinck said, "It's surprising to find out you can do it (karate). You sort of grow into it."

Larry Zinck agreed with his wife that, "you're always working to a higher plateau." That once a student reaches a certain pre-determined level of ability and competence, there's always a next step to be taken.

The Zincks did say that the attainment of a 'black belt' was not their original reason for taking up the fast growing physical fitness pastime, but if that came about, they wouldn't refuse it.

"We basically intended (to do it) for the exercise. Now we find it good for the whole family," said Larry.

A litter bit of praise for cleanup

This fall, students at the schools are receiving the praise of both the school board and their neighborhoods over the clean-up they have effected.

Janet Moffat, president at Wellington junior secondary, reported that school has also used detentions, including placing students on the "litter list" for clean-up.

The students are also working on making the lunch-eating area a more attractive spot, so lunch litter won't be spread all over the school grounds.

Wellington is the school that created the most complaints last spring, but the clean-up there has been so marked that the students have received letters of congratulations.

At Nanaimo District Senior Secondary, reported student prime minister Lydia Blackman, posters, recycling boxes, contests and newspaper articles have been used in the anti-litter drive.

The school board also received written reports from Ladysmith Secondary and John Barsby and Woodlands junior secondary.

Winkelman told the students that he had seen a vast improvement all over the district in the school litter problems.

In a related move, the school board decided that the communication with the students over the litter problem had been so effective that the secondary students councils should receive a permanent spot on the school board agenda, to bring whatever reports or complaints they would like to the board.

Discrimination probe granted

Former sawmill worker Janice Foster has been granted an appearance before a board of inquiry into her claim that B.C. Forest Products Ltd. discriminated against her by not hiring her.

University of Victoria law professor Jim McPherson will hear the case, but no date has been set for the hearing.

Foster, who had worked in a Tahsis sawmill at one time, moved to the Cowichan Valley and applied for work in the mill there. She was not hired, although she saw inexperienced men being hired. She claimed she was not hired because she was a woman.

She complained to the B.C. Human Rights branch, and although the branch thought her claim was valid, it was impossible to get a settlement from the company.

The matter was referred to Labor Minister Allan Williams in July, with a request that a board of inquiry be appointed.

The minister has also appointed a board of inquiry to look into a Port Alberni man's complaint against Flying Industries Forest Tankers Ltd. of Port Alberni.

Thomas Kellough, a pilot with the company, was forced to retire from his job because he had reached the age of 60.

Kellough, who had regular medical checkups, said he was still fit to fly, and should not have been forced to leave his job because of his age.

A hearing has been set for Dec. 12 and 13, but the company has claimed it should come under federal rather than provincial jurisdiction, and a Supreme Court hearing has been scheduled for Dec. 4 to decide on jurisdiction.

TALK SALARIES IN PUBLIC, SAY TRUSTEES

COURTENAY — Courtenay school trustees have agreed to tell members of the Comox District Teachers Association that in future they desire to have salary negotiations carried out in public.

A report from the board's negotiator outlined the procedure which has taken place to date in this year's negotiations and stated, "during the course of negotiations it became apparent that despite stated desires by both parties that negotiations take place at the table and not through the media, the teachers' spokesman saw fit to release many details of the discussions to the media following most meetings."

The request, which will be made by trustees to the CDTA, will be for all future negotiations for salary and bonuses to be conducted in public, with the public and media invited as observers.

Such a procedure, according to the board's negotiator, would ensure that all demands and offers made during negotiation sessions are reported, not just the items which the CDTA wishes to make public.

Former CPR ferry crippled at wharf

FANNY BAY, B.C. (CP) — The former CPR ferry Island Princess was partly submerged at the federal wharf here Thursday night and attempts to raise the 35-metre vessel which was being refurbished at this east Vancouver Island community had failed so far.

Nancy Green, a spokesman for Crombie Contracting Ltd. of Campbell River, current owners of the boat, said another attempt to raise the vessel would be made at low tide at midnight Thursday.

Built in Tacoma, Wash., in 1913 as the steamship The Daily for runs between Tacoma and Seattle, the 339 gross tons vessel was bought by Canadian Pacific in 1918 for its Gulf Islands run.

Between 1961 and 1966 it was operated by B.C. Ferries and then sold to J. H. Todd and Son as a floating shop for fishermen and then lay dormant for several years. Crombie bought the ship six weeks ago to use as a floating logging camp.

Residents said it was moved last weekend, the bow grounded, lowering the stern and when the tide came in the stern was under six metres of water. Two-thirds of the vessel's length was submerged.

Canadians jump to lead in World Cup golf

PRINCEVILLE, Hawaii (AP) — Dave Barr of Kelowna, a rookie on the Professional Golfers' Association tour, fired a five-under-par 67 for the individual lead and combined with Dan Halldorson of Brandon to give Canada a surprise spot at the top of the team competition Thursday in the uncompleted first round of the World Cup golf tournament.

Halldorson, who regained his tour card last month and will rejoin the pro tour next year, had a 70 in the balmy island weather, giving Canada a 137 total.

"It would mean a lot of prestige to win this and maybe silence some of the critics of Canadian golf," the 26-year-old Barr said.

The long day's play was halted by darkness with six teams stranded on the course. The teams from Ireland, Venezuela, Burma, Finland, Belgium and Yugoslavia marked their positions on the course and will complete their first-round play this morning before the start of the second round. None appeared to have a chance to move among the leaders.

The Philippines team was second on the list of two-man teams from 48 countries in this goodwill event. Eleuterio Nival, with a 69, and Rudy Lavares, with a 70, were two shots back at 139.

The United States, represented by PGA champ John Mahaffey and ailing U.S. Open titleholder Andy North, were tied for third with Argentina at 141, four shots behind the leaders.

"We're in good position," said Mahaffey. "We're gonna be all right. But Andy is awful sick. I don't know what it is, a cold or virus or what, but he's very tired and can barely talk. But, boy, was he grinding out there. He got off to a bad start, but he was grinding. You could see it in his eyes."

Mahaffey shot a 69 on the 6,940-yard Makai course on this westernmost island of the Hawaiian chain and North birdied the final hole to match par 72.

Spain, which has won the last two World Cups with Severiano Ballesteros playing a major part in the victories, was well back at 145. Ballesteros declined to compete this year in the event that offers $2,000 to the winner, much less than the prize in most tournaments. Manuel Pinero had a 72 and Antonio Garrido a 73 for the defending champions.

Mahaffey, who one-putted five times on the front nine, and Nival were tied for second in the individual competition with their 69s. The group at 70 included Vicente Fernandez of Argentina, Kim Suck Bong of South Korea, Halldorson and Lavares.

Barr, who finished 133rd on the American money-winning list this year, didn't make a bogey, holed two putts from about 20 feet, got another birdie from eight feet, twice hit irons inside of four feet and could have been even better, missing a pair of birdie putts from about eight feet.

Bruins maintain streak by turning back Sabres

Montreal Canadiens, successful to the point they are resented almost as much as they are admired, have been tagged as a dynasty too good for the good of the NHL. But no such feelings exist about the Boston Bruins, yet the records show that in the last eight seasons the Bruins are only a small step behind the defending Stanley Cup champions.

About the only difference in club records since the start of the 1970-71 season is that Canadiens have won the Stanley Cup four times while the Bruins have won it only once.

In schedule play, however, there is practically no difference. The Bruins have won six division titles and finished second twice while Canadiens have topped their division five times, finished second once and third twice. Canadiens barely balance that small edge by leading in victories, but only by 409-402. Over the eight years, the Canadiens with a 409-116-107 log against the Bruins' 402-148-82 performance, have averaged only five more points a season than the Boston club.

And things are about the same this year. When the Bruins edged Buffalo Sabres 4-3 Thursday night for a fifth win in an unbeaten run now at six games, they went slightly ahead of Canadiens for the season. The Bruins have 31 points from 22 games for a better percentage than Canadiens, who have 32 points from 23 games.

Now three points ahead of Toronto Maple Leafs with two games in hand, the division-leading Bruins got a stiff argument from the Sabres for two periods and needed some excellent goalkeeping from rookie Jim Pettie to hold at 2-2. But the disciplined Boston club took over in the third period, allowing only four shots at Pettie while blasting 20 at Bob Sauve.

John Wensink, a burly winger who scored only 16 goals last season while drawing 181 penalty minutes in his role as an enforcer, put the Bruins ahead early in the third period with his 11th goal of the season and veteran Wayne Cashman followed with the winning shot less than two minutes later.

In Thursday's other game, Philadelphia Flyers, a last-place club with more points than all but two clubs not in their division, tightened things up a bit in the tough Patrick Division by shutting out St. Louis Blues, 3-0.

With 28 points from their first 24 games, the Flyers are four points behind the co-leaders with a game in hand on Atlanta Flames but three games closer to the end of the schedule than New York Islanders.

Blake Dunlop, most valuable player in the American Hockey League last season, and team-leader Bobby Clarke both had a goal and an assist in the easy win over the club with the poorest defence record in the league.

Thw Blues, who have allowed 119 goals in 15 games, held their own in a 1-0 first period but managed only six shots against Wayne Stephenson in the last two periods.

Dunlop opened the scoring at 17:20 of the first period, backhanding a rebound of Bob Dailey's shot past goaltender Ed Staniowski. The second period was scoreless and the Flyers put it away with goals 33 seconds apart early in the third period.

Dunlop, who has 11 points in the 11 games he has played this season, and Clarke combined to set up rookie Behn Wilson for the 2-0 goal at 4:14 and Clarke, with Dailey drawing his second assist, banged in his own rebound at 4:47.

Phillies dropped from Rose list

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia Phillies announced Thursday that they are no longer negotiating to acquire Pete Rose, baseball's veteran superstar in search of a new uniform for next season.

"We have made an offer that would have made Pete the highest paid player in Phillies history," club owner Ruly Carpenter told a press conference. "Unfortunately it was not quite enough.

"He didn't get into the game of one-upsmanship for which I have the greatest admiration. He's a great player and I wish him the best."

The Phillies for some time had been considered the front runner in the Rose sweepstakes with a reported offer of $1.8 million over three years.

The 37-year-old Rose, who owns the modern National League record hitting streak of 44 straight games, has been searching for a new team since he played out his option after 15 years as a star infielder-outfielder with Cincinnati Reds.

Since returning last week from an exhibition tour with the Reds in Japan, Rose has visited Atlanta, Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburgh. San Diego and New York Mets also made overtures, but are no longer in the running.

Rose said the Phillies' offer was "a tremendous one, but it wasn't what I thought I could get from a couple of the other ball clubs."

Asked who the front runner is now, Rose replied, "I don't think there is a front runner. We're down to four—three in the National League and one in the American League—and I've said all along I'd like to stay in the National League and beat Stan Musial's record."

Musial holds the National League record for career hits of 3,630.

Atlanta Braves, St. Louis Cardinals and Pittsburgh Pirates are the three National League clubs still in the running. In the American League, Kansas City Royals have been in contact with Rose.

Rose said he could not rule out reopening negotiations with the Phillies but added, "It doesn't look good right now that I'll be playing in a Phillies uniform."

Earlier in the day, New York Mets announced that they were withdrawing from the Rose competition, saying the switch-hitter had turned down a package deal offer in excess of $2 million.

Sparky Anderson, fired this week as Reds' manager, told the Indianapolis News Rose called him Wednesday night and said "the offers were getting bigger and bigger."

Hawks, Bruins win

Portland Winter Hawks widened their Western Division lead Thursday and New Westminster Bruins moved closer to second-place Victoria Cougars in Western Hockey League action.

Winter Hawks opened up a six-point lead over the Cougars, idle until a Saturday game here with Seattle Breakers, by beating the host Breakers 3-2.

Meanwhile, in Edmonton, the travelling Bruins bombed their hosts 7-1. They're now only three points back of Victoria, with five games in hand.

Bruins scored on their first two shots on goal, then went on to pummel the Oil Kings before 3,588 fans.

Pat McGill scored on a 40-footer from the slot and then deflected a slapshot from the point on a power-play to start the Bruins to their first win after two setbacks on a road trip.

Yankees deny story of trade for Carew

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees strongly denied a published report Thursday that they were trying to work out a trade with Minnesota to obtain Twins star first baseman Rod Carew.

"Absolutely, totally, unequivocally untrue," Yankees president Al Rosen said when asked about a story in the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press which said the deal involved the Yankees sending first baseman Chris Chambliss, outfielder Juan Beniquez, pitcher Ken Clay and $400,000 to the Twins for Carew.

"We've got a good first baseman here already," Rosen said of Chambliss. "If you look at his RBIs (90), his homers (12), his batting average (.274) and his ability to play every day, and this year he was a golden glover, and he's only 30 years old, you get the idea he knows how to play baseball.

"We have had no talks with Minnesota involving any of the players mentioned—and that includes Carew," Rosen added.

Last-gasp goal gives Trios win

Gary Carruthers scored at 19:57 of the third period Thursday night to give Oak Bay Trios a 10-9 victory over Esquimalt Legion Blues in a South Island Junior 'B' Hockey League game.

By TOM KEYSER

He's still tall (six-feet-eight) and he's still talented. But that's not news.

No, Reni Dolcetti hasn't grown an inch since his inaugural campaign with University of Victoria Vikings. And he's working with pretty much the same tools that allowed him to finish sixth in scoring in the Canada West men's basketball conference for 1977-78.

Something different, though, has been added. Dolcetti, who averaged 14.5 points a game last year and led the conference in field-goal accuracy, is newly committed—to his team, to his coach and to basketball.

"Before the season started, I made a commitment to myself and the team. I wasn't particularly pleased with my contribution last year so I decided to do something about it," said the articulate giant prior to a Thursday workout at UVic.

Some commitment. Dolcetti leads the CWUAA with an average of 21.8 points a game. He's scored 131 points in six starts.

Moved over from centre to accomodate freshman Gerald Kazanowski, Dolcetti, now a forward, has turned into a devastating shooting threat from the outside.

And he's gained consistency.

"That was my biggest concern. Last year, I wasn't playing up to my capabilities all the time."

Dolcetti was a third-year transfer from Sudbury's Laurentian Voyageurs. He left hometown Sudbury to reunite with UVic coach Ken Shields—"the first coach to ever inspire me"—and for a change of scene.

"I told Reni when he came out here people were going to expect a lot from him right away. But I thought it would take him about a year to make the adjustment."

It did. Dolcetti's scoring touch is filling the hole left in Vikings' offence by the departure of defending conference scoring champ Billy Loos.

"Reni's playing his best basketball ever for me," continued Shields. "He's showing much more consistency and he's going to be even better by the end of the season."

Now 23, Dolcetti refuses to take all the credit for his getaway. He showers most of it on scatter-gun guard Robbie Parris, in his fifth and final year at UVic.

"Robbie's a real key to my play. He feeds me the ball, he opens up a lot of holes and he makes things happen. Inch for inch, he's the best guard in the country."

If the five-foot-eight Parris keeps opening holes and Dolcetti keeps shooting through them, UVic figures to improve on its 5-1 conference record, good for first place, after the Christmas break.

And, if he keeps his new committment in mind, Reni Dolcetti's better than an even bet to give UVic its second scoring leader in two seasons.

HOOPLA — Vikings don't play another inter-conference game until Jan. 12, when Calgary Dinosaurs visit McKinnon Gym. But they won't get much of a break. This weekend, Winnipeg Wesmen are at UVic for a rare Sunday night appearance. Winnipeg, which lost 84-72 to UVic in a meeting at Winnipeg this fall. The men's game at 8:30 p.m. follows a UVic-Winnipeg women's exhibition at 6:30 p.m....Following that, Vikings play host Dec. 8 to Athletes in Action—"the best basketball team in Canada", according to Shields—then, after 10-day break from practice, travel to Salem, Ore., for the John Lewis Classic Dec. 21-22, to Winnipeg for the Wesman Classic Dec. 28-30, and to Calgary for the Calgary Classic Jan. 4-6. Kathy Shields' Vikettes, at UBC for a weekend tournament, fly to Winnipeg for games Dec. 3-4, then go to Simon Fraser for a tournament Dec. 28-30. They play Victoria Home Lumber Dec. 8 as a preliminary to the AIA-Vikings encounter and resume conference play Jan. 5 in Edmonton...St. Mary's Huskies, Canadian collegiate champions, will be among the competition for Vikings at Winnipeg and Calgary. In a recent exhibition, Huskies lost by only 20 points to Duke University, ranked No. 1 in the NCAA by Sports Illustrated...Shields is concerned with Vikings' inconsistency, saying some veterans are "taking things for granted. We have to improve our concentration in practice." Shields anticipated last Saturday's first season loss to the Pronghorns in Lethbridge. "We were complacent and I could see it coming. You can't afford to be complacent in this league."

Aussie leads in Kiwi golf

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP) — Australian Jack Newton carded a four-under-par 66 Thursday for a one-stroke lead over Americans Bob Risch and Vance Heafer and three other players after the first round of a $75,000 golf tournament at Titirangi.

Also at 67 were New Zealand's Bob Charles and Australians Bruce Devlin and David Graham. Rafe Botts and Art Russell of the U.S. and Brian Barnes of Britain and 68, followed by Ted Ball and Kel Nagle of Australia, Bob Douglas and Sandy Galbraith of the U.S. and Stuart Reese of New Zealand.

Roger Klatt of St. Albert, Alta., fired an opening-round 72 and was in a group with American veteran Arnold Palmer. Bob Beauchemin of Victoria was another shot off the pace.

Aaron off to good start

BARRANQUILLA, Colombia (AP) — American Tommy Aaron shot a one-under-par 71 on Thursday to grab the first-round lead in the $13,000 Colombia Open golf championship in this city in northern Colombia.

Peter Townsend and Malcolm Grepson, both of Britain, and Colombian Clever Mendez were tied at 72.

Sandy Lyle of Britain shot 73, while Buddy Gardner of the U.S. was at 74. Britain's Tony Jacklin was well back at 77.

Investigation in limbo

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A Milan magistrate investigating the Grand Prix of Italy crash which took the life of Swedish Formula One race car driver Ronnie Peterson said Thursday he would decide by the end of the year whether to drop the case or issue indictments.

Armando Spataro, a Milan deputy state attorney, made his remarks after completing the questioning of the eyewitnesses, including British driver James Hunt, to the Sept. 10 pileup of cars at the start of the race in nearby Monza. Peterson, whose Lotus car caught fire, died the next day.

Tracksters honored

PARIS (AP) — Henry Rono, Kenya's multi-world record breaking distance runner, and Vilgemina Bardauskene of the Soviet Union, the first woman to clear seven metres at long jump, are the Agence France Presse sportsman and sportswoman of 1978.

Rono, who broke three world records (13 minutes, 8.4 seconds for 5,000 metres, 27:22.5 for 10,000 metres and 8:05.4 for 3,000-metres steeplechase), won the men's award ahead of Mario Kempes, the Argentinian World Cup soccer star.

Bardauskene was chosen in the women's section for breaking the seven-metre barrier with a leap of 7.09 metres (23 feet 7½ inches) at the European championships in Prague.

Patriots had Jets' number

NEW YORK (AP) — Remember New England's 55-21 rout over New York Jets last Oct. 29, the National Football League game in which the Patriots bolted to a 41-7 halftime lead?

There may have been a very good reason for the Patriots' early runaway—their ability to intercept the Jets' defensive signals.

The New York Daily News reported in today's editions that it has learned from sources on or close to the Jets that not only did New England steal the New York's defensive signs—the ones relayed from the bench onto the field—but had been tipped off by another National Football League team as to what they meant.

"It seemed like every time our line slanted in one direction, they (the Patriots) ran a play the same way," one Jets' defensive player was quoted as saying.

"I didn't notice it until afterwards when we looked at a video replay, but Grogan (New England quarterback Steve Grogan), seemed to take up to 28 seconds (of the alloted 30) to call every play," said another New York player.

A third Jets' defensive player was quoted as saying, "It did seem like they knew what we were going to do."

"There has been a lot of talk they knew our defensive calls," said another New York player. "All I know is that from then on, we started changing the signals every week."

After the game, Jets coach Walt Michaels had said: "This will never happen to us again. I know what they did, but by the time we figured it out it was too late."

In their next meeting, Nov. 19, the Patriots won again, but the score was much closer—19-17.

'Hideous' banking loophole plugged

—CP

KENNETT, left, inspector-general of banks, greeted by House finance committee chairman Robert Kaplan before testifying Thursday.

Lost revenue: $500 million

OTTAWA (CP) — Government officials uncovered "a pretty hideous kind of situation" in the chartered banks last month after a two-year investigation of their security holdings.

The findings of the inquiry were released Thursday by William Kennett, inspector general of banks, in an appearance before the Commons finance committee. Kennett said the investigation helped convince Finance Minister Jean Chretien to close a controversial tax loophole in his recent federal budget.

Chretien provoked widespread criticism in the business community two weeks ago by announcing that two highly-popular financing arrangements between the banks and large corporations—income debentures and term-preferred shares—would no longer be tax deductible.

The government decided to halt the financing arrangements because income earned by the banks from them was classed as tax-free dividends rather than taxable interest. Federal and provincial treasuries had lost an estimated $500 million so far and authorities estimated another $150 million would have been lost to the federal government in 1979-80.

The government inquiry showed the two controversial financing arrangements accounted for 80 per cent of all chartered bank holdings of securities in Canadian corporations by October 1978. Two years earlier, they accounted for just 29 per cent.

In dollar terms, these holdings jumped to $7.2 billion from $765 million two years earlier—almost a tenfold increase.

Kennett released these figures at the request of Sinclair Stevens, Conservative finance critic. Stevens earlier asked the finance ministry officials for an idea how widespread the problem had become.

Kennett said his investigation showed that the banks and corporations considered these tax-deductible arrangements a low-cost substitute for normal business loans.

"As someone concerned with the capital markets of this country, I became more and more uneasy."

He said he was pleased and relieved when Chretien decided to change the income tax law in his budget to close off these arrangements.

The public probably had little idea of the extent to which banks used these arrangements because current disclosure rules allow them to go for months without making them known, Kennett said.

The government has come under fire from both opposition parties over the timing of the decision to close the tax loophole.

Airlines freebies: Some OK, others not

● No more free flights for me, says Lougheed. Page 45

Premier Bennett has decreed that no one in his office is to accept free trips on airlines but one of his cabinet ministers said she took a free flight to Hawaii two years ago.

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy said she represented the government on the inaugural flight by Pacific Western Airlines to Honolulu and did not see anything wrong with a politician taking that type of trip.

Opposition leader David Barrett said that when the New Democratic Party was in power Dave Stupich (NDP—Nanaimo) represented the B.C. government on a Japan Air Lines inaugural flight.

Environment Minister Jim Nielsen said earlier the government does not have any rules against accepting free trips on airlines.

THE ISSUE WAS RAISED after Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed says he accepted free trips from CP Air, a private airline.

A spokesman in Bennett's office said Thursday the premier ruled "from day one, that nobody in his office, including himself, was to accept free transportation."

He said the premier decided the acceptance of free trips was wrong because they carried an obligation or what could be seen as an obligtation.

The spokesman said he could not speak for other ministries but presumed the premier's rules applied.

McCarthy said Thursday she put an end to her staff using free airline tickets on assuming the travel industry portfolio. She said that before she became minister, staff in the ministry were being offered and using free airline tickets and hotel space.

NEILSEN SAID MINISTERS have never been told it would be acceptable to take a free trip from an airline for holiday purposes, but "I don't think there is a written restriction on that."

He said he personally would find it inappropriate to accept a free trip from an airline for holiday purposes, but he does not feel accepting such trips leaves a politician open to pressure from airlines.

Barrett said the policy of the previous NDP government was that there would be no free trips. He said on official inaugural flights, when the government was to be represented, a government representative was sent.

He said Stupich, the former provincial finance minister, travelled on a Japan Air Line inaugural run as official government representative as requested.

"We go to openings or things like that. But no free trips. That was our policy. And I took none, and to my knowledge cabinet ministers did not take any."

All members of the Legislature are issued free passes on the government-owned B.C. Ferry Corporation, Vancouver Island Coach Lines and Pacific Stage Lines, as well as CP Rail, Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, B.C. Coast service and Canadian National Railways.

The CP Rail and CNR passes are valid on all lines for cabinet ministers but the others are limited to free transportation within the province, a spokesman said.

Somoza may go —after 2 votes

MANAGUA (AP) — President Anastasio Somoza said Thursday that he is willing to put his job on the line in a countrywide plebiscite to determine if the Nicaraguan people want him to remain in office.

But Somoza said in a nationally televised news conference he would not resign immediately if the plebiscite showed the people opposed him.

Somoza said if the plebiscite went against him another election would be held—not for the presidency but for seats in the National Assembly. He said the National Assembly then would choose his successor and he would not leave office until after a successor was chosen.

Somoza was asked why he had changed his mind after insisting during a year of guerrilla war and political turmoil that he will stay in office until his current elected term expires in 1981. Somoza said: "In politics, only the rivers never run backward."

Yarrows served strike notice

BY DON COLLINS
Colonist reporter

The twin shipyards of Yarrows in Esquimalt and Burrard in North Vancouver were hit with 72-hour strike notice Thursday by union officials representing approximately 800 tradesmen.

Jim McAvoy, president of the Joint Shipyard Conference, said mediator Ken Albertini would be asked today to report out of the case to pave the way for a possible walkout.

"If management wants to get serious and get down to negotiations we'll meet with them. But if not they'd better face the fact there are going to be a lot of people on the street," McAvoy said.

The Joint Shipyard Conference is the umbrella structure for 22 unions that bargain with the Burrard-Yarrows shipbuilding interests. About 200 of the 800 tradesmen are in Greater Victoria.

The unionists voted almost a month ago in favor of strike action if necessary, but at that time mediation hadn't begun.

McAvoy said mediation was adjourned after meetings Monday and Tuesday of this week. He said strike notice was served at noon Thursday in compliance with a decision by the conference membership.

Albertini would have to officially give up his attempts to mediate a settlement before a strike could begin legally. While the strike notice gives the tradesmen the right to walk out in 72 hours if Albertini is out of the case, they have a maximum of 90 days in which to act.

According to McAvoy, the major snag concerns six or seven items related to fringe benefits. The unions want a shorter work week, although they say they aren't specifying a definite number of hours at this point. They are also attempting to improve vacation and severance pay agreements.

The shipyards have been facing a fairly high rate of unemployment. An announcement earlier this week disclosed that Yarrows had been awarded a $100,000 drydocking contract for the Alaska ferry Columbia, something that was expected to provide about 100 men with seven to 10 days' work. There are reportedly 160 men employed at the yards now.

Gillespie

Lougheed sees crisis over delay in oil-hike

CALGARY (CP) — Federal proposals to delay a Jan. 1 oil-price increase of three cents a gallon might result in a serious crisis in Confederation, Premier Peter Lougheed said Thursday.

Earlier in the day, federal Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said Ottawa felt it was not desirable to have the Jan. 1 increase, adding that any subsequent oil-price increases would not be automatic if they would be detrimental to Canada.

At a news conference, Lougheed said if that was Gillespie's position, then Alberta would revert to its original stance that both governments signed a binding agreement calling for the Jan. 1 increase.

"The nine other energy ministers and the premiers said if there was a binding agreement, it should be lived up to," he said.

"You should then ask him (Gillespie) 'Are you going to unilaterally break an agreement with the government of Alberta that the other governments said should not be breached?'

"What kind of federal state are we going to have, that somebody is going to breach an agreement?"

"Now if what he is saying, as part of a negotiation ploy, that we're going to go with the alternative that (Alberta Energy Minister Don) Getty and Mr. Gillespie discussed.

TIME RUNS OUT FOR TIMES

LONDON (AP) — Officials of the London Times, an institution of British life and journalism, announced Thursday the paper is suspending publication in a showdown with labor unions.

The suspension was announced at a news conference by the paper's managing director, Marmaduke James Hussey.

He said there will be no edition today of the 193-year old newspaper and that the suspension would continue indefinitely.

Other papers of Fleet Street warmly praised The Times in fighting the test battle over new technology and union discipline.

But the National Graphical Association (NGA), one of nine major unions at the paper, remained adamant that it would not dicker under threat of shutdown.

The Times' management was not backing down on opposing wildcat strikes that Lord Thomson of Fleet, Toronto-based president of Times Newspapers, says are necessary to keep the paper and its sister publications

● Dropoff points, donations list, Page 2.

Sometimes he talks to pigeons.

When you're old and lonely and you're feeding them anyway, why not give them a word or two of affection? Or tell them what you think is wrong with the world?

For one thing, they don't talk back or make any cruel wisecracks like some of the people he meets.

That's the way the old man likes to look at it—at least on those days when the aches and pains of age subside enough to let him wander through the streets.

Feeding his feathered friends is about the biggest thing life has to offer him these days. To look at him, you'd think it was enough. The smile is usually in place. And those eyes of his seem to be forever laughing at the world.

He'd probably laugh at the thought of having to eat a sandwich and soup for Christmas—the kind of meal he could afford on his own limited funds. But inside he'd be hurting a little. There's something about being forgotten at Christmas that does that to people.

Fortunately, there are people like the Colonist readers to add at least a glimmer of joy to Christmas for the less fortunate members of our society—the old, the forgotten, the deserted, and those who are handicapped in one way or another. They do it through the Colonist 500 Fund.

As a result, an old man who cares about the welfare of pigeons will have someone caring about him this Christmas.

Terror strikes Ulster towns

BELFAST (AP) — Nineteen bombs exploded in 11 towns and villages in Northern Ireland on Thursday night in what authorities called part of a terror campaign against commercial targets by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

The only injuries reported by police were two policemen slightly hurt by an incendiary device in Ballygawley, 64 kilometres southwest of Belfast, and two young children slightly hurt in Armagh, the worst hit town, 56 kilometres southwest of here.

In Lurgan, 32 kilometres southwest of Belfast, dozens of members of the Jehovah Witnesses religious sect escaped injury when a bomb exploded next door to where they were holding a prayer meeting.

Tests predicted quake—scientist

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — A University of Texas scientist said Thursday a team he worked on predicted Wednesday's devastating earthquake in Mexico more than a year ago but that red tape prevented them from sending experts and equipment to the scene to lessen its impact.

"We had a program approved by the USGS (United States Geological Survey) but they were not able to come up with funding," lamented Dr. Gary V. Latham, associate director of the Geophysics Laboratory at UT's Marine Science Institute in Galveston.

"It's just a terrible shame," he said in a telephone interview from his Galveston office.

"We were able to forecast the location of the centre of quake to within about 25 miles," Latham said.

Doing the hustle —Vancouver style

By DON COLLINS
Colonist reporter

One recent evening in Vancouver I stepped out of a downtown hotel and was mistaken for a judge three times before reaching the corner.

Mistake No. 1 was made by a small blonde with a winning smile.

The same approach was made in quick order by a pair of equally attractive brunettes.

The only missing element in this comedy scene was someone standing on the corner shouting: "Here come de judge . . . here come de judge."

It was, you see, the very same corner involved in Vancouver's judge-meets-prostitute case. That is, Case No. 1. It is necessary to be specific at such times, since the city ended up with two cases involving the names of judges and young women.

To be fair, it's no longer a question of how a judge happens to contact a Lady of the Night in downtown Vancouver, but how he can manage to avoid it.

They're everywhere . . . standing in groups of four and five . . . hovering in doorways . . . lining the outside of buildings . . . coming at you individually, or two and three abreast . . . even occasionally peeking around telephone poles at you.

There is, of course, good reason for this bumper crop on the otherwise barren stretches of West Georgia Street. A court decision some time ago made it possible for enterprising young businesswomen to work the streets free of arrest—as long as they weren't overbearing in making their pitch.

It was all the encouragement that was needed for an amazing rebirth of free enterprise, sidewalk style.

As one who has made an exhaustive study of the trade in the past (purely for journalistic reasons, of course) I decided during

Hopper

'Too many developers' on APC so he resigned

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist reporter

After 10 months of "frustration and getting nowhere," Max Hopper has resigned from Victoria city council's Advisory Planning Commission.

Hopper, a retired James Bay resident, said in an interview Thursday he quit because too many members of the APC had a conflict of interest.

Hopper said too many people on the commission "make their livelihood as developers or builders."

The commission, he said, was so top heavy in favor of development that his voice didn't carry any weight.

Although a number of other members had no affiliation with the building or development industry, Hopper said, he was often the only independent voice at meetings.

"I stuck out like a sore thumb," he said.

Hopper said he believed that APC members should have no connection whatsoever with the development and building industry.

"It got to me and I saw I wasn't getting anywhere," he said.

The mayor said he was sorry to receive Hopper's resignation.

"He made a valuable contribution to the APC and I accept his resignation with regret," he said.

Asked to comment on Hopper's charges that the commission had too many development representatives in its ranks, the mayor pointed out that the APC had "pretty broad community representation."

Apart from himself and four aldermen, the commission had among its members an architect, an accountant, a teacher, a housewife, several businessmen, one contractor and one developer.

The mayor said it was also not valid to simply tag people with their profession. It was equally important to observe how individuals performed on the commission.

"The APC has served council well. It certainly can't have done everything wrong," Young said.

Hopper's vacancy won't be filled until next Wednesday's inaugural meeting when the mayor submits his recommendations for appointments to city council.

Art of napping

Excitement of the opening day of the eighth annual Christmas Crafts Faire was too much for three-month-old Amaya Kerr who decided the best thing to do was catch 40 winks on mom's shoulder. After all, those artisans will be back again today and Saturday in the foyer of the McPherson Playhouse.

Sooke pupils in the clear chamber says

Reports of undisciplined elementary youngsters in Sooke school district elementary schools have prompted about 80 phone calls in the last two days, Nestman said Thursday, many of them from people who are having second thoughts about the small community 35 kilometers west of Victoria.

The confusion comes from that fact that although the school district bears Sooke's name, fully 85 per cent of the school district's enrolment comes from the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area, and that's where the problems students live, Nestman said Thursday.

Nestman phoned every principal in the Sooke area to find out if any of the children in their schools were candidates for an new alternative program scheduled to begin next January to handle students with severe discipline problems.

He credited Sooke principals and staff with doing an admirable job, and said the publicity surrounding students at the other end of the school district was damaging to Sooke. As a realtor, Nestman said "the first thing people who are thinking about moving in ask about is how are the schools. We feel the effect of this kind of thing."

Sooke is not the only school district in the area with this kind of problem. The Saanich school district has its headquarters in Sidney. Furthermore, most youngsters in Saanich municipality attend schools in the Greater Victoria school district

Something has been missing from Victoria for the last eight days—the sun.

It last put in an appearance on Wednesday, Nov 22, beaming down for six hours and 24 minutes

However, some brief relief from the predominantly wet, overcast conditions may be in store for the region.

The Pat Bay weather office says that either today or Saturday a high pressure ridge may displace the series of moist low pressure fronts responsible for the wet spell.

If that happens, a cooling, drying trend with periods of sun will result that could last through Sunday.

But another disturbance is building up and could arrive here as early as late Saturday evening.

Incidentally, the wet frontal system Thursday resulted in mild temperatures for the area. Victoria had a recorded high of 8 Celsius, while Tofino and other West Coast points reported 9 C., which was Canada's high for the day.

By DON COLLINS, Colonist reporter

Oak Bay firefighters got the sad news in apologetic tones Thursday night: with a single exception, they had lost the long fight against manpower cutbacks.

And there was an added bitter pill: they had convinced some aldermen of the importance of fire prevention, but only to the point of creating a call for more smoke detectors and fewer firefighters

Council's three-member fire committee was unanimous in its decision supporting retention of one of four jobs that were to have been eliminated from a total of 31 in the fire department. One man will be retained to provide an improved fire prevention program. His position will be reviewed in 18 months.

That's the proposal that will be made to the full council. But since Mayor Brian Smith was present and agreed, it meant the proposal already had a majority of four on the seven-member council.

The firefighters, guided by Terry Erskine, president of the B.C. Professional Firefighters Association, had drummed up considerable public support in their fight to offset an earlier council decision based on the recommendations of Vancouver consulting firm G.H. Newhouse and Associates. Newhouse said the fire department should drop three of its current 30 members and not retain another job position, already vacant.

The recommendations and council action were based on dollars and cents. The municipality said it was faced with disproportionate firefighting costs, although the risk factor was low.

During its all-out campaign, the firefighters gathered a large petition backing their cause and presented council with a detailed brief.

They argued that human life would be endangered if any more jobs were lost.

The fire committee dealt with the brief and reaction from Newhouse before meeting with the firefighters again Thursday

Ald. Peter Bunn, chairman of the committee, said he fully respected the firefighters and didn't relish the job before him, but that he had to tell them the Newhouse's reaction to their brief upheld the "thrust" on the consultant's original report.

Erskine tried to persuade the committee that council should appoint the yet-to-be named B.C. fire commissioner to bring in a decision based on the facts from both sides, but was told council would be shirking its responsibility by doing so.

The smoke detectors came into the picture when Ald. Doug Watts, who has two in his own home, said: "Despite all the good efforts of you folks, the ordinary citizen is responsible for his own life."

The saving of someone's life in a fire usually happened through a freak incident—such as someone passing the scene at the time—and really had nothing to do with a fire department's manpower, Watts said.

But for the most part, he said, the citizen was responsible for his own life.

House may survive

An 1880-vintage house with heritage significance may be saved from the wrecker's hammer because of response by the public to a recent Colonist story, the chairman of Saanich's Heritage Advisory Committee said Thursday

The brick house at 916 Tolmie faced demolition unless a use could be found for it, Peter Orme told the committee earlier in November.

"Following the item in the paper we received several calls from people interested in saving the old house," he said

Optional uses ranged from using the building as a restaurant, a realtor's office and a store to sell native arts and crafts.

Orme said the overwhelming response could result in a change of plans by the developer, Stanrick Developments Ltd.

"He is now considering asking that the land, rezoned earlier this year for a 64-unit medium-density apartment building, be rezoned for commercial use," Orme said.

This would mean a broadening of the options available for the future use of the old house, he added.

The two-storey house with its arched windows is one of the very few brick houses remaining in Saanich.

Although it has no particular architectural style, Orme would like to see it retained because of its uniqueness.

Rules tough on students

New unemployment insurance regulations aimed at preventing people from frequently leaving and then re-entering the labor force will cause serious problems for students, the Alma Mater Society at UVic believes.

In a letter to manpower minister Bud Cullen, AMS president Dave Connell said the proposed changes will almost eliminate students from unemployment insurance eligibility during the summer.

Prize collectors stay with garbage

Two Greater Victoria men who won the Western Express Lottery's top prize of $100,000 drawn Nov. 22 said Thursday they'll remain in the garbage collection business.

Don Sled, 42, of 25 Midwood, View Royal, and Real Forcier, 35, of 1335 Chan Place, Colwood, are operators of Sled and Forcier Disposal, a two-truck, two-man business.

Both said they were bombarded with phone calls from well-wishers Thursday when they returned home after work. Sled had four calls in the first 10 minutes at home, and Forcier had three in five minutes.

Both men also said they would continue picking up garbage and had no immediate plans for a big holiday.

Forcier said he wanted to wait until "things get settled down first" before making any decisions. Sled said he would "absolutely" remain a garbageman. He said there was no thought of taking time off because it was such a small operation both of them were needed to carry on.

Both men are married.

Mayor's lesson: revamp system

A radical change in the committee structure of Saanich council will be unveiled Monday by Mayor Mel Couvelier at the inaugural meeting of the 1979 council.

"We will be switching to a type of committee of the whole system in an effort to come to grips with managing the affairs of the municipality," he said in an interview.

"The only way we can achieve this goal is by involving all aldermen in discussion at the committee level."

The mayor, who held an informal meeting with his new council Wednesday, said the failure of this year's council to make any noticeable progress and come to grips with major issues, was responsible for the changes he was planning.

"I'm not happy with our progress this year," he said, "but the failures taught me lessons I know will be beneficial to me next year."

Council members, he said, were agreed that the municipality's community plan should have priority and be completed as soon as possible next year.

There would also be a continuing thrust in improving the level of services in public works, by faster attention to potholes and other routine problems.

Aldermen-elect also said they wanted to explore methods of improving community relations, he said, a proposal which could see the hiring of a community affairs relations officer.

Couvelier said he fully expected the industrial development issue to surface again early next year.

On a personal note, he said he favored redevelopment of the Tillicum outdoor theatre site, but this did not necessarily mean he supported a proposal for a 295,000 square foot shopping centre on the land.

Of critics who told him he was moving too quickly or trying for the impossible, Couvelier said: "Man's reach should always exceed his grasp."

A series of neighborhood council meetings initiated by this year's council would be continued as a means of keeping the community involved and informed.

However, he admitted concern over community response to affairs of the municipality.

"I'm worried it's going to decline now that citizens are beginning to feel comfortable in the feeling they have a council responsive to their needs."

As a means of renewing public interest, he said he would support a proposal by Ald. John Mika that agendas be published in advance of council and committee meetings.

Former sawmill worker granted rights hearing

By NANCY BROWN
Colonist reporter

Former sawmill worker Janice Foster has been granted an appearance before a board of inquiry into her claim that B.C. Forest Products Ltd. discriminated against her by not hiring her.

University of Victoria law professor Jim McPherson will hear the case, but no date has yet been set for the hearing.

Foster, who had worked in a Tahsis sawmill at one time, moved to the Cowichan Valley and applied for work in the mill there. She was not hired, although she saw inexperienced men being hired. She claimed that she was not hired because she was a woman.

She complained to the B.C. Human Rights branch, and although the branch thought her claim was valid, it was impossible to get a settlement from the company.

The matter was referred to Labor Minister Allan Williams last July with a request that a board of inquiry be appointed.

The minister has also appointed a board of inquiry to look into a Port Alberni man's complaint against Flying Industries Forest Tankers Ltd. of Port Alberni.

Thomas Kellough, a pilot with the company, was forced to retire from his job because he had reached the age of 60.

Kellough, who had regular medical checkups, said he was still fit to fly, and should not have been forced to leave his job because of his age.

A hearing date has been set for Dec. 12 and 13, but the company has claimed that it should come under federal rather than provincial jurisdiction, and a Supreme Court hearing has been scheduled for Dec. 4 to decide on jurisdiction.

The core municipalities are beginning to have problems with a monster of their own creation, a union official said Thursday of the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association.

Expressing astonishment at what he said was an attempt to limit time off for union negotiations, Rick Doyle said: When they set up the GVLRA to deal with many locals at the same time they found 18 to 21 employees had to be off at once to bargain with them.

"I guess they're afraid of what it would mean to the taxpayers. But it's their Frankenstein. They'll have to deal with it."

Doyle, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees local covering Victoria's inside staff, said a seven-page document from GVLRA manager Carl Anshelm proposes contract standardization that would limit leave of absence for union officers to 20 days.

It was unheard of, he said, and would literally mean—if accepted—that union negotiating teams in the future would have to change personnel in mid-negotiations.

However, some of the others preparing for what looks like a tough round of post controls bargaining, aren't paying much attention to the time-off proposal. They are inclined to treat it lightly on the theory that it is frivolous and will be quickly discarded.

That didn't prevent some consternation Thursday as CUPE's Big Five (the Joint Negotiating Committee) prepared for its initial meeting with Anshelm.

Jim Walker, president of the Victoria outside workers' local, said a late directive from the city ruled that all leaves of absence would have to be cleared through city hall ahead of the meetings.

"I'll tell you, if that hadn't been cleared up there wouldn't have been any meeting with Anshelm today," Walker said.

Wheels apparently began to turn following word of the development and Walker said he was told that the intent of the directive had been "misinterpreted."

The joint council, which covers the outside workers, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt municipal employees, two Greater Victoria School Board locals, and one from the capital region, will spend next Tuesday studying Anshelm's document.

Three locals, including Doyle's, are bargaining independently.

Doyle, saying the GVLRA is offering an 11 per cent wage and fringe benefit increase over two years, isn't happy. He says CUPE members have fallen about 10 percentage points behind the cost of living over the last two years.
